Strike Halts 4 Railroads; Gt. Northern Still Running

Switchmen Go Out In 40-Hour-Week Dispute; Mediation Offer Is Rejected

Chicago, June 25 (AP).—Four thousand AFL switchmen went on strike today against five large Western and Midwestern railroads.

The walkout stopped trains on four of the lines. The fifth railroad, the Great Northern, reported normal passenger operations continued over its 8000-mile system, but there were some curtailments of freight movement.

The railroad said only 60 Great Northern switchmen are members of the striking Switchmen's Union of North America. The majority are members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

The other lines struck the 8000-mile Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific system, the 2413-mile Denver, Rio Grande and Western, the 1500-mile Chicago and Great Western, and the 1105-mile Western Pacific.

Arthur J. Glover, president of the union, said in announcing "our strike is on," that " the major issue is the 40-hour week" and that many switchmen "now work 48 and 56 hours a week without overtime pay."

A spokesman for the railroads said "the real issue is compensation for the 40-hour week." He said Glover turned down a presidential fact-finding board's recommendation of 40-hour week and an 18-cent hourly wage increase.

56 Hours Not Required

He said few switchmen work 56 hours a week, and none are required to put in that many hours. A few do, the railroad spokesman said, because they want pay for an extra eight hours weekly.

The union is asking 48 hours pay for a 40-hour week, equivalent to an hourly increase of 31 cents.

The switchmen seek a contract similar to one signed with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad which provided 48 hours' pay for a 40-hour week. The increases in daily pay would be from $13.06 to $15.67 for switch foremen or yard conductors; from $12.21 to $14.65 for helpers or yard brakemen, and from $10.71 to $12.86 for switch tenders.

The strike deadline at 6 a. m., local standard time, found the four roads most affected virtually idle. All trains scheduled to depart after

Swimmer Bitten At N. Y. Beach; Shark Blamed

New York, June 25 (AP).—A Queens youth was severely bitten while swimming off Rockaway Park today and a hospital doctor diagnosed his wounds as "possible shark bites."

The youth, Joseph Falango, 16, was in fair condition at Rockaway Beach Hospital, with 25 stitches in leg and feet wounds.

Falango, John Cronin, 17, and his brother, William Cronin, 16, were swimming about 150 yards off shore. John Cronin said he heard young Falango shout that he had been bitten by a shark. The others thought he was kidding, and began splashing around.

A moment later young Cronin said, he saw the fin of a fish. He thought the splashing drove the fish away. He and his brother helped Falango to shore.

Kenny, a Pal, Comes Through; Gives Joan Desired Measles

Mother Nature proved this weekend she can spread measles a lot better than can doctors.

Two-year-old Joan Anderson suffers from a chronic kidney disease, nephrosis. Medical authorities say a case of measles may help a child stricken with the stubborn ailment.

Twice since February Joan has been exposed to measles on purpose and twice she failed to catch them. Then, two weeks ago, Joan played with her 4-year-old cousin, Kenneth Anderson, 437 Evarts st. ne., who seemed to have a cold. Four days later Kenny broke out with measles, Saturday Joan followed suit.

Family physician, Dr. Herbert D. Glick, decided in February to try the measles treatment for Joan's nephrosis. Joan cuddled up to red-spotted Theresa Sprinkle, 6, 503 2d st. ne., for nearly an hour February 2. Nothing happened.

The doctor exposed her to the disease again late in March . . . Still no measles for Joan.

Hope for inducing the disease was abandoned. Then, on Saturday, Joan noticed red spots on her arms.

Mrs. Helen Anderson, Joan's mother, said her daughter spent Sunday in a dark room at their apartment in the Cathedral Mansions, 3000 Connecticut ave. nw. She said Joan had a temperature of about 103.

Worst U. S. Air Disaster

Parts of Bodies, Plane Debris Found in Lake; 58 Missing

Milwaukee, Wis., June 25 (AP).—Traces of a missing Northwest Airlines plane were found tonight in Lake Michigan off St. Joseph, Mich.

It appeared that all 58 persons aboard were killed and that the giant craft plunged into 110-foot deep lake area during a violent thunderstorm before dawn yesterday.

The Coast Guard said parts of an airplane wing with "Northwest Airlines" painted on the side, were found 12 miles northwest of St. Joseph. Parts of two bodies, a section from an airplane log book and several blankets carrying the marking "N W" also were picked up in the area.

The report came just before darkness halted a second full day of extensive hunting for the plane over the lake and inland over Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The plane, a DC-4, filled to capacity, vanished mysteriously after last word came from it by radio at 12:15 a. m. (EST) yesterday. It was bound from New York to Seattle via Minneapolis.

St. Joseph is about 110 miles southeast of Milwaukee, on the western shore of Lake Michigan. It is about 75 miles northwest of Chicago, near the southernmost borders of the lake.

Loss of all 55 passengers and three crew members on the flight would make it the worst commercial airline tragedy in the Nation's history.

About 100 airplanes took part in the air survey of lake and land areas today.

The planes fanned out from Milwaukee as far west as Minneapolis, north to Green Bay, Wis., south to Wilmette, Ill., a Chicago suburb, and east to Michigan shore areas between Benton Harbor and Ludington.

NEA Warns Of Inadequate Aid to Schools

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

School enrollments continue to mount but the Nation each year appropriates a dwindling percentage of its wealth for education.

The National Education Association, taking a look at the state of education at the midcentury, yesterday reported that money—specifically lack of it—is the root of the evils of overcrowded classrooms, part-time education and substandard teaching.

The situation has been building up since the turn of the century and cannot be blamed solely on the stork although the wartime increase in the birthrate has been a big factor in education's problem.

Population shifts, lengthened school terms, the increased hold-

3 Dead, 1 Missing, Score Hurt As Two Huron Ships Crash

Detroit, June 25 (AP).—Three passengers aboard the excursion liner City of Cleveland III lost their lives in a ship crash in a heavy fog on Lake Huron today. Another is missing and presumed dead. A score were injured.

The ship collided with the Norwegian freighter Ravnefjell at 6:20 a. m. about five miles off Harbor Beach. Both ships, after picking up victims, proceeded to port.

The liner carried 85 passengers and a crew of 160.

Waters Up to 35 Feet Deep

17 Persons Drown, 25 Missing In 6-County Flood in W. Va.

West Union, W. Va., June 25 (AP).—Seventeen persons were drowned and 25 others were reported missing tonight after a cloudburst sent flood waters up to 35 feet lapping over a six-county area.

[In Washington, the Red Cross said it had counted, unofficially, 23 dead and 10 to 15 others missing in the flood area, the United Press reported.]

The rains washed out sections of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad's main-line track. Damage ran into the millions.

A unique fire threatened a portion of Weston, in Lewis County, when the high water ruptured a gasoline storage tank and 10,000 gallons of the fuel caught fire. The danger was dissipated by the swift current.

Whole towns were isolated. A National Guard official estimated that 90 percent of the village of Berea in Ritchie County, where 14 to 16 homes clustered, had been swept away. State police reported 200 homes destroyed at West Union alone. Weston's flood damage was reckoned at two million dollars.

The B. and O. westbound National Limited from New York to St. Louis was stranded at Pennsboro. Passengers were taken to Parkersburg and rerouted via New Martinsville.

B. and O. officials said "very great damage" had been done to a 40-mile length of trackage between Salem and Cairo.

The National Limited was left where it was stranded.

Truman Flies To D. C. for Conferences

Long Emergency Parleys Are Held On Korean Crisis At Blair House

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

President Truman, looking grim and troubled, returned to Washington last evening to make important decisions about Korea.

He had cut short his weekend "back-porch vacation" at Independence, Mo., after getting an urgent request from Secretary Acheson to hurry home.

High State and Defense Department officials had decided earlier in the day, without waiting for the President, to take two forms of emergency action to help the Southern Korean government.

The first was to ask the Security Council of the U. N. to order a prompt cease-fire and a withdrawal of the Communist invaders back to the boundary line of the 38th Parallel.

The second was to rush emergency military supplies to the Korean defenders. Most of the help will consist of ammunition rather than of tanks and planes, and some of it was being flown and shipped yesterday from General Douglas MacArthur's command in nearby Japan.

Only First-Aid Steps

But both these actions were little more than emergency first-aid measures. The question that needed decision was what to do if the North Korean Communists ignored the demand of the United Nations Security Council to stop their invasion.

If South Korea were to collapse quickly, the United States probably could do little about it, although it would be a bitter blow to the whole non-Soviet world.

But if the South Koreans resisted strongly—as they appeared to be doing yesterday—there would be rising demands for American sea and air power to help the southern Koreans in their struggle.

The United States has been South Korea's chief sponsor, helper and protector, and only last Monday John Foster Dulles, the Republican adviser to the State Department, assured members of the Korean National Assembly that "you will never be alone."

The President, therefore, had to decide quickly how far to go in backing up this moral commitment and a whole series of other similar pledges to the Koreans since the Japanese surrender. It was the same kind of decision he had to make at the start of the Berlin blockade two years ago, and it would not be an easy one.

"We've Got a Job to Do"

The President was not his usual smiling self as he landed at the airport at 7:20 p. m. and greeted Secretaries Acheson and Johnson and other high officials.

Photographers clustered around him as he talked briefly to Ache-

U. S. Appeal Brings Fast U. N. Action

Return to Original Borders Called for In Resolution Passed By Security Council

Lake Success, June 25 (NYHT).—The Soviet-boycotted United Nations Security Council in a dramatic emergency session today adopted a United States resolution which calls on the North Korean Communist government to "cease hostilities" and withdraw their invasion forces from the Republic of Korea.

The resolution, adopted on the eve of the fifth anniversary of the signing of the U. N. Charter, called on all member nations to refrain from aiding the North Korean regime in its attacks on the republic of Korea.

There were nine votes in favor of the proposal and one abstention-Yugoslavia.

Backing the United States with speeches and ballots were Britain, France, China, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, India and Norway.

Report From Commission

Helping to sway the ballotting was an on-the-scene report from the U. N. Commission for Korea which radioed that the situation was "assuming the character of a full-scale war and may endanger the maintenance of international peace and security."

A counter-proposal by Djuro Nincic, Yugoslav delegate, was defeated, six to one, with three abstentions. Nincic refused to accept the version that North Korea attacked South Korea and said the Security Council should have more information before passing judgment. His proposal had called for cessation of hostilities, withdrawal of armed forces by whomever perpetrated and would have invited the government of North Korea to state its case to the Security Council.

Ambassador Ernest A. Gross, American delegate, said that "wholly illegal and unprovoked" invasion was a "breach of peace and an act of aggression" in urging immediate action.

All There But Russia

Every member of the 11-nation Security Council attended the extraordinary session except Russia, which has boycotted the U. N. since January 13 over the issue of Chinese representation. On the basis of previous statements, the Soviet Union will consider the Council action as illegal.

The emergency session was called on 11 hours' notice. Gross, acting on instructions from Secretary of State Dean Acheson, routed Secretary General Trygve Lie out of bed with a telephone call at 3 a. m. today and asked for the meeting.

It was the second Sunday emergency meeting in U. N.'s five-year history. The other time it met hurriedly on a Sunday was after

MacArthur Flies Military Aid To Korea, Guarded by Fighters

Tokyo (Monday), June 26 (U.P.).—United States fighting ships and planes will protect American shipments of military supplies to South Korea, Gen. Douglas MacArthur announced today.

Usually well-informed sources said the shipment of badly needed war material already was under way by plane.

A headquarters announcement said munitions and materials would be furnished with United States naval escort and fighter plane cover to insure safe delivery.

Similar protection also will be provided for the ships evacuating American women and children from Korea, the announcement said.

At the same time it was reliably reported that the United States Navy has dispatched an undisclosed number of destroyers from Japan to escort ships evacuating women and children from Korea.

(Evacuation of more than 600 wives and children of American personnel in the Seoul area began smoothly today, the Associated Press reported. The evacuees, the dispatch said, will leave Korea by sea with United States air protection.)

(Small boats were taking the evacuees to two ships anchored in deep water, the Associated Press said. The ships will carry them to Fukuoka, Japan. American planes from Japan will escort the ships until they reach the convoy of United States destroyers at sea.)

The escort destroyers were reported to have put out from the Kyushu port of Sasebo to convoy vessels which left the South Korean port of Inchon Sunday.

A reliable source said, however, no United States Navy ships have put into Korean ports as yet.

In Tokyo, meanwhile, John Foster Dulles, special State Department adviser, scheduled a series of talks today with Gen. Douglas MacArthur and other leaders on the Korean war situation, following up an urgent conference he had with MacArthur last night.

Lights burned throughout the night in MacArthur's headquarters as chiefs of his staff studied developments in the Korean explosion.

MacArthur's headquarters refused comment on Washington reports that arms are already being flown to Korea, but a long train

This assault was launched by ground forces along the 38th parallel in the Ongjin, Kaesong and Chunchon sectors, and by amphibious landings on the east coast in the vicinity of Jnagmung. In addition, North Korean aircraft have attacked and strafed the Kimpo airport in the outskirts of the capital city of Seoul.

North Korea's Attack Catches 'Hill' Committees by Surprise

By The Associated Press

The sudden invasion of South Korea by the Communist-dominated North apparently caught best informed Congress members completely by surprise, but some immediately insisted that the United States stand by Korea.

There were suggestions for United Nations pressure and action on arms.

Republicans at the Capitol were quick to declare the Communist action resulted from United States policies in the Orient, which they have been criticizing for months.

It was evident that neither the Armed Services Committee nor the Foreign Relations Committee in the Senate, the two congressional groups in the best position to know of a threat, had any inkling that the invasion was imminent.

The attack came on the heels of comments from highly placed Congress members and other officials expressing cautious optimism on the prospects for peace, at least for the moment.

President Truman has been talking recently about improvement in the chances for peace. John Foster Dulles, Republican adviser to Secretary of State Dean Acheson, has been reassuring in statements in the Far East, where he is on tour. Chairman Tydings (D., Md.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee has said in comment on the foreign arms aid bill that this "seemed to be a

Couple Arriving From Europe Finds United States Amazing

With Independence Day just around the corner, The Washington Post gives its readers some reasons for celebrating it. The reasons come from an American correspondent who has been in Europe for five years and who felt like shooting pin-wheels and sky rockets when he came home recently with his French wife.

This is the first of six articles on the theme "Let Freedom Ring."

With a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.—THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

My French wife was so tense when the immigration officers came aboard our ship in New York harbor that she hardly looked at the Statue of Liberty.

"How long are they going to question me?" she asked. "One hour? Two hours? I wish it were all over."

I knew the Missus had a sort of border-crossing complex. On our travels through Europe, she usually got jittery 50 miles ahead of every frontier. But I had never seen her more nervous than when she first saw the United States of America.

The American immigration officer was a white-haired gentleman with non-committal features. He stamped my United States passport, looked at my wife, checked her visa, stretched out his hand and said with a smile:

"Welcome to this country, Madam. We are glad to have you here."

Mrs. Herald's face lit up, but as we walked off the gangplank she inquired:

"And now, where are the interrogators?"

It took me some time to convince her that she was "through," that she already was a resident of the United States, safe in America.

U. S. Plane Engages Red Yak Fighter After Raid

6 Reported Killed In First Bombing Of Capital City; Americans Leaving

BULLETIN

Seoul, Monday, June 26 (AP). — A Russian-made plane attacked a United States Mustang fighter over Seoul today observers reported.

Whether the fighter shot back was in dispute. Ten persons having lunch at the United States Embassy said the Mustang drove off the Russian craft, which presumably was from the north Korean air force.

A responsible United States military advisor with World War II experience said, however, the Mustang simply took evasive action and shook off the Russian fighter, a fast Yak-3.

He said the Yak sprayed machine gun bullets as it passed over the United States military advisory group headquarters.

The Yak earlier had dropped two bombs within the city limits.

Korean police said six civilians were killed by the North Korean bombs.

Police said three bombs in all were dropped. It was the first aerial attack on this capital of the South Korean Republic since the Communist North began an invasion yesterday.

Anchorage, Alaska, June 25. (U.P.).—All American military personnel attached to Fort Richardson and Elmendorf Field here were ordered back to their posts today.

Seoul, Korea (Monday), June 26 (U.P.). — Counter-attacking South Korean troops have checked the invading Northern Communists on most parts of the front, advices said today, and the tiny Republican air force went into action against the Red attackers.

The Southern forces, thrown into some confusion by the completely unexpected Communist attack Sunday, had reorganized and were fighting hard.

[The Associated Press, however, quoted Korean Minister Kim Yong Ju as saying in Tokyo that the invaders had reached Uijongbu, only 12 miles north of Seoul. —Editor's note.]

Northern planes, of Russian Yak fighter type, strafed Seoul's Kimpo Airport Sunday. They set fire to oil and gasoline stocks and riddled a United States Air Force C-54 transport plane which had arrived from Tokyo.

(A dispatch from Taipei, Formosa, quoted an intercepted wireless message as saying the Kimpo Airport was attacked again at 7 a. m. Monday (5 p. m. EDT Sunday).

The bad news from the front was as follows:

It was confirmed, as reported, that the Communists had captured Kaesong, 40 miles northwest of Seoul.

Most of Chunchon, 50 miles northeast of Seoul, was in enemy hands but fighting continued.

Along the Imjin River, at a point 30-odd miles northwest of Seoul,

Military Advantage Seen in North Korea

If North's Alone

South Korea Should Win, Johnson Says

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Norfolk Naval Base, Va., June 25.—Defense Secretary Louis Johnson said today that South Korea should defeat the Communist North Korean attackers unless the latter got "outside assistance."

Speaking on the deck of the aircraft carrier Midway, Johnson indicated that American military chiefs feel Korean's army—built under United States guidance—is strong enough to win unless there is substantial Russian aid.

"If South Korea fails to come through, it will be evidence of outside assistance," he declared.

The Secretary, who returned Saturday from a tour of Far East bases and long talks with General MacArthur, addressed a group of sixty business, labor and professional leaders attending a Defense Department "orientation conference."

Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff; Adm. Forrest P. Sherman, chief of naval operations, and other high-ranking officers were present.

Calls U. S. 'Ready'

Discussing the state of American defenses, Johnson said there is a plan for the defense of America approved by the President, himself and the joint chiefs.

"If the worst overtakes us, we are ready to go without delay," he declared.

The Defense Secretary said he knew his hearers were "disturbed about Korea," and added:

"Until the Commander in Chief has spoken, there is little I can say on the subject, but I think I can say this with propriety—

"In South Korea there has been developed a nucleus for a force which in the absence of substantial external aggression should assure the security of that country. The effect of the present attack by North Korean forces will not be known for several days, but if South Korea fails to come through it will be evidence of outside assistance.

"Although we have given military aid to South Korea for only a short time, those in a position to know feel that it has been quite effective and that their army has made substantial progress in providing for a proper defense."

Reviews Unification

Speaking in his shirt sleeves on the big flat top's hangar deck, Johnson talked of his work to unify and strengthen the armed forces during the past 15 months.

"We had to let Russia know we were unified and ready to go in order to deter her," he said. "We couldn't let her think it would take three, six or nine months to ready after trouble starts.

"Russia doesn't expect to overcome America by force of arms, but plans to bring on an economic crisis largely by waste and duplication in the military establishment, so the soil will be fertile for the spread of communism without firing a shot."

The current 13-billion-dollar annual defense expenditures are "well within" our capacity, he declared, but any substantial increase would endanger it greatly.

Defends Economy

Defending his economy program, Johnson stated it is directed at elimination of Civil War forts, unnecessary airfields and civilian employes who are not required.

"I don't care how much hell is raised," he said of the criticism, "I'm going to keep on whittling on the excess in the interest of the solvency and safety of the United States."

The main job, however, now is done, and a "surgeon's scalpel rather than a cleaver" is required. He told of how one service put in an order for a few hundred typewriters, which would have been bought except that Gen. Joseph McNarney's Management Committee discovered the Army had 45,000 typewriters in storage. Another service had $14,900,000 worth of paper on hand and the Navy found it had enough anchors to last 50 years.

The Defense Secretary denied published reports that there were "misunderstandings" between him and President Truman or that he had lacked support from the President.

'Not a Candidate'

"I am not a candidate for President of the United States," he added. "I'm a candidate only to do this job and then go back to the hills of West Virginia and get some sleep and rest."

Johnson said he had been "much distressed" to find that carpenters on an important defense housing job in Alaska were striking for a raise from $2.70 to $3 an hour.

"Unless something happens within the next few days, this will require national action," he declared. "And if it continues much longer it'll border on being unpatriotic. We can't have our men and their wives and daughters living in what amounts to dugouts another winter."

Lauding the Nation's reservists, he urged the businessmen in his audience to be liberal about granting them leave with pay to take summer training and without using their vacations.

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

At the present moment the war in Korea is one between a small lightly equipped army in defensive positions assailed by a larger and better equipped force capable of theoretically unlimited expansion.

The South Korean army, according to the best information available here, includes about 100,000 troops equipped and trained by the United States. Its equipment is light, with few tanks and little or no medium and heavy artillery. Backing it up is a constabulary, estimated at 60,000 strong, and trained in ground combat weapons and tactics.

South Korea has a few unarmed training airplanes, seven of which were damaged by North Korean raiders yesterday. It has a small patrol craft navy, but three of its largest vessels—former U. S. PC boats—were at Honolulu yesterday on their way to Korea.

The North Korean army has been reported by South Korean sources to be composed of 183,000 officers and soldiers trained and equipped by Russia. In addition there is a guerilla force of unknown strength and training and a large number of Communist-trained and indoctrinated youth.

South Korea Warned

To spearhead its assault on land, the North Koreans have an estimated 173 Russian tanks and the same number of aircraft, mostly the Yak fighters which furnished excellent ground support for the Red Army during the latter phase of World War II. Supporting the North Korean amphibious operation on the east coast of South Korea is a navy of 32 vessels.

As long ago as May 10 South Korea was warned by its Defense Minister, S. M. Sihn, that an attack from the north was impending. To what extent this warning was heeded is not now certain; that the attack was a tactical surprise is probable, but the apparently slow progress of the invading force seems to indicate the surprise was not complete.

The relative size of the attacking and defending forces and the superiority of the North in equipment would seem to weight the balance in favor of the North. There are imponderables, however, and these appear also to favor the North.

Most important of these imponderables is the question of aid from Russia on the one hand, and from the United States on the other. What this country would or could do awaited last night a White House conference which President Truman hastened back from a weekend vacation in Missouri to attend. Pending this conference, the Department of the Army issued two formal statements yesterday, both brief and both to the same point:

"No comment."

MacArthur Well Equipped

Foremost indication at the Pentagon that another sore spot had appeared on the globe was the sudden burgeoning of large-scale maps of Korea on office walls. That, plus an inordinate amount of coming and going for a Sunday afternoon, alone was reminiscent of 1940 and 1941 in the old Munitions Building.

As for United States resources within reach of Korea (though not within easy reach), Gen. Douglas MacArthur has some 160,000 troops under his command in two Army Corps. He has a considerable amount of excellent military equipment, some of which he was understood yesterday to have started on its way to South Korea.

The United States Air Force has an undisclosed number of squadrons in Japan and on Okinawa and Guam and in the Philippines. Some fighter units are in Alaska and on the West Coast.

The Navy maintains its Seventh Task Force in the Western Pacific, consisting of one 27,000-ton aircraft carrier, one cruiser and four destroyers with auxiliary vessels and train. Even with this force the Navy has been vocally skeptical of its ability to maintain communications in the Pacific in case of sudden war.

Russian support of North Korea, on the other hand is not only close at hand but is potentially limitless from a military standpoint. North Korea is directly accessible to Russian military support through Manchuria, and this support could be supplied along lines of communication safe from attack except by aircraft, which South Korea hasn't got.

Russian Aid Likely

Furthermore, Russia is not simply a "good friend" of North Korea as the United States is of the Southern part; Russia holds North Korea in vassalage and an attack from that area upon South Korea is necessarily a Russian attack. Russian support of the North Korean army is therefore a foregone conclusion; the only question is the extent to which Russia would go in furnishing support.

One indication of Russia's part in the current phase of the invasion may be found in reports from Seoul that tanks in the assaulting northern army were manned by Russian crews. Also, aircraft which have taken part in raids were exclusively Russian, although the question of whether they were manned by Russians cannot now be known.

The element of greatest danger in the present situation appears to lie in the probability that Russia will not permit the invasion to fail, even though it should mean throwing Russian troops as such into the conflict.

Should the United States attempt to meet such a move by the use of United States troops or aircraft, Russia's response undoubtedly would be to reinforce her forces already there.

In such a battle of reinforcements, Russia would hold cards, spades and big casino; it would be a competition between a fully armed nation operating over protected land lines of communication and an unprepared nation confined to exposed and vulnerable sea lines.

From a strictly military standpoint, it is not a desirable spot to be in.

Red Rally Foiled At Lorelei Rock

Bingen, Germany, June 25 (AP).—Several hundred young Communists battled German police for nearly an hour today when the police broke up their protest march against French defense preparations.

The Communist youths, who call themselves "Young Peace Fighters," had scheduled a rally at Lorelei Rock on the Rhine, where the French, in keeping with general allied policy, have prepared roads for destruction in the event of Soviet attack.

Police guarded entrance roads to the site, however, and the Communist youths marched to Bingen.

Fist fighting broke out as police moved in to break up the unauthorized parade. Police said no one was injured and there were no arrests.

House Draft Leaders Talk Compromise

By the United Press

House military leaders tentatively proposed a compromise draft bill yesterday under which President Truman could order inductions only if the Nation actually were attacked while Congress was out of town.

The proposal was outlined by Chairman Carl Vinson (D., Ga.), whose House Armed Services Committee had been holding out for a plan which would give Congress sole authority for ordering draft registrants into uniform.

The Senate votd to give the President power to start inductions whenever Congress was not in session—with or without an attack.

The Senate voted to give the House-Senate conference committee which hopes to come up with a compromise soon. Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) said yesterday he believes a bill can be whipped into shape and sent to the White House sometime this week.

The Communist invasion of Southern Korea was expected to spur their work and some thought it might even encourage House conferres to make further concessions.

Vinson said the situation hadn't changed his attitude, however.

He also said he has no immediate plans to call a meeting of his committee to canvass the Korean matter although he hinted he may later.

"I don't think we'll have any meeting on that yet," he said.

While no men have been inducted since last year, military leaders argue the law must be kept on the books to spur voluntary enlistments and save time if a new global emergency should arise.

The old draft law expired Friday midnight, but Congress rushed through a special resolution extending it another 15 days so a compromise could be worked out.

The Congress probably will meet on the bill today.

Dulles, MacArthur Confer

loaded with guns and other military supplies was seen early today moving toward a military airfield.

It was believed that the train contained supplies which would be flown to the invaded country.

Four transport planes stood by at Haneda airport awaiting orders to send the first lot of arms to the South Korean forces.

Air Force informants said that arms-carrying planes would be protected by United States fighter planes, presumably the latest jet types.

American destroyers "undoubtedly" will be sent to Korea to convoy ships evacuating American women and children, another reliable source said.

Perhaps significantly, in view of the treaty situation, Dulles scheduled talks today with Dr. Herbert Norman, chief of the Canadian mission, and Sir Alvary D. F. Gascoigne, British mission chief.

A North Korean air force strafing attack on Kimpo airport, at Seoul, on Sunday caused authorities to order back to Tokyo three American planes already in the air destined for the South Korean capital.

Col. W. H. S. Wright, acting chief of the United States Military Advisory Mission in South Korea, was one of the air travelers recalled from Kimpo. He later flew in a light plane to another airport south of Seoul.

Wright had been here conferring with members of MacArthur's staff.

MacArthur, who commands United States forces in the Far East, has no direct responsibility for independent Korea. However, the Washington indication that arms will be rushed to the embattled nation made it seem certain that Far East headquarters would be asked to send aid.

In addition to the problem of supplies for Korea, staff officers were believed studying means of evacuating American dependents from the Red-invaded country.

South Korea Opens Counter-Offensive

reliable advices said the Communists had taken the railroad bridge and succeeded in crossing the river. South Korean army sources here said that the bridgehead had been contained on the south side.

Balancing this was the general check of the enemy advance, and a series of counterattacks in which the Republican forces gained ground in addition to strengthening their positions.

North Korea Town Taken

Two companies of picked South Korean troops drove across the thirty-eighth parallel of latitude, which forms the frontier, to capture the manufacturing town of Haeju, just north of the line.

The Republican troops captured quantities of equipment, including 16 trucks and about 100 light machine guns.

The tiny L-5 liaison planes which the South Korean air force inherited from the United States took the air this morning.

Equipped with makeshift rocket launchers—bazookas strapped to wing struts in pairs—the Republican planes destroyed two enemy tanks.

The most heartening news was that the Republican forces were making an excellent showing in the Ongjin Peninsula which military observers had virtually written off as lost.

The little South Korea navy reports setting fire to and sinking an enemy warship off the east coast and said it was engaging eight others.

Various front advices said the South Korean forces had destroyed about 20 enemy tanks in the Uijongbu sector north of Seoul, where the Communists are about 25 miles—their farthest advance—from the capital.

Up to 18 enemy tanks have been destroyed on other sectors.

There has been an almost complete absence of casualty reports.

A dispatch from the Eighth Division area, which extends eastward from Chunchon, said that 200 enemy troops had been killed and four captured in fighting up to this morning.

Three persons were wounded in a strafing attack enemy fighter planes made on the railroad station of Seoul's suburban manufacturing town of Yongdonpo yesterday.

The situation along the east coast, where enemy troops—or guerillas or both—were reported to have landed in the early hours of the attack Sunday was reported static. There were unconfirmed reports that as many as 4000 to 6000 enemy men had been landed here.

Guerilla Outbreaks Minor

Guerilla outbreaks reported in the far south seemed on the basis of latest reports not to be serious.

The main threat to the capital was in the Uijongby corridor, the traditional invasion route from the north.

But the South Korean Seventh Division was reported in this sector to have stopped attacks by heavy northern tank units, with bazooka teams and antitank artillery.

The North Koreans were using tanks, ships and planes of Russian type.

Developments in this test of strength between the United States-supported South Korean Republic and the Russian-dominated North Korean Communist regime included:

1. The United Nations Commission on Korea broadcast an offer to meet representatives of South and North in an attempt to end the fighting, and appealed to both sides to stop hostilities meantime.

2. South Korean Foreign Minister Ben C. Limb, in the name of the government, denounced the North Korean attack as criminal and said the aggressors would be smashed.

3. Evacuation of American women and children to the South, for embarkation to Japan, was started at 3 a. m. today (1 p. m. EDT Sunday).

4. A 9 p. m. curfew was imposed in Seoul as the first step toward possible martial law.

5. City buses were commandeered to supplement the trucks which roared through the streets of Seoul with troops of the crack "Capitol" division and other forces on the way to the front.

6. Members of the American mission to Korea spent the night sorting out their secret documents and were ready to burn them if the Communists thrust dangerously close.

7. The radio of Pyongyang, the Communist capital, broadcast the amazing statement that the Southern Koreans opened the fighting and that Northern forces were taking "remedial" action.

8. Col. W. H. S. Wright acting commandant of the United States military mission, arrived by plane from Tokyo at 3:20 a. m. He had been conferring with Gen. Douglas MacArthurs' staff officers.

Throughout Sunday reports from the front were almost uniformly discouraging. The Communist sneak attack was a complete surprise. United States military mission officers expressed fear that the enemy would take all the territory between the frontier and the Ongjin River, which runs from northeast to southwest a few miles below the thirty-eighth parallel. There was one report that a light enemy force had crossed the river.

In the early hours of this morning there was better news.

Advices said that in the Ongjin Peninsula the South Korean troops struck back sharply. It was indicated that they had retaken the manufacturing town of Haeju, near the border, and had thrust across the border at one point.

It was reported that in the Samchok area on the east coast the government forces encircled an enemy force which had landed from the sea in the first hours of the fighting.

A front dispatch said that nearly 20 enemy tanks had been destroyed north of Uijongbu, north of Seoul. United Press Correspondent George Suh, at Uijongbu, quoted Brig. Gen. Yoo Chai Hueng, commanding the 7th Division, as saying that at least eight medium Russian-made tanks had been knocked out.

United States Ambassador John J. Muccio last night ordered women and children dependents of Americans to be ready for evacuation at 12:30 a. m. and said women employes of the Embassy might leave on their own initiative.

Evacuation plans had been drawn up months ago in anticipation of such an emergency.

The evacuation got under way at 3 a. m. in a fleet of buses, trucks and private cars.

The wives and children had to go whether they wanted to or not. Few women members of the embassy staff elected to leave.

In all between 800 and 1000 women and children were in the evacuation contingent.

The evacuees were taken to the southern port of Inchon.

One of them was Mrs. Frances Cooke, an expectant mother whose husband is a teacher in the new English Language Institute. The husband was formerly a New York City public school teacher.

Nearly all single women in the American mission elected to remain and aid in essential work. They helped prepare secret documents for burning and manned switchboards.

Despite reports of successful south Korean counterattacks, United States military mission officers remained very anxious.

Lieut. Col. W. J. Mahoney, vice chief of the American military advisory mission, said last night he did not see how the government troops could keep the Communists from taking all territory as far as the Imjin River.

United States and Korean authorities estimated that the Communists had thrown into action one division on the Ongjin Peninsula. A tank company and an armored infantry battalion, in addition to infantrymen, were reported in the Pochon-Uijongby area directly north of Seoul. One enemy regiment was reported in the vicinity of Kaesong, 40 miles northwest of Seoul. One division with heavy artillery and tanks was reported attacking Churchon, 50 miles northeast of Seoul. Troops in battalion strength were reported operating in the mountains between Chunchon and the east coast.

Council Orders Cease-Fire

Egyptian planes bombed Tel Aviv during the Palestine war.

Gross acted in the absence of Ambassador Warren R. Austin, permanent American delegate to the U. N., who was scheduled to arrive by air at midnight tonight from Burlington, Vt., where he was vacationing.

Gross described the nature of the invasion by North Korean armed forces and said, "This is clearly a threat to international peace and security, and is of great concern to my Government."

"It is a threat which must inevitably be of grave concern to the governments of all peace and freedom-loving nations."

He told the Council that "a full-scale attack now is going forward in Korea . . . a nation brought into being by the United Nations."

The invasion strikes at the fundamental purposes of the U. N. Charter and "openly defies the interest and authority of the United Nations," Gross declared.

The American resolution, which said the government of South Korea was the only lawful government in that country, branded the invasion as a "break of the peace," and then called upon the North Korean puppet authorities:

1. To cease hostilities forthwith.

2. To withdraw their armed forces to the 38th parallel—the border dividing North and South Korea.

The resolution also requested the U. N. Commission on Korea to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces and to keep the Security Council informed on the execution of the resolution.

Secretary General Lie, in opening the Council session, said he considered it "the clear duty of the Security Council to take steps necessary to reestablish peace in that area."

Lie minced no words in what he thought of the situation. He said a report he had requested from the U. N. Commission on Korea, and other information "make it plain that military actions have been undertaken by North Korean forces and that these actions will violate General Assembly resolutions and the U. N. Charter."

"The present situation is a serious one, and is a threat to international peace," Lie said.

The cablegram received by Lie from the Korean Commission quoted President Syngman Rhee of Korea as vehemently denying reports by the Communist Pygongyang Radio that it was the South Koreans which had started the attack by invading the north.

President Rhee authorized the U. N. Commission to broadcast a plea to the Russian-dominated puppet regime to cease fire.

quiet period." And only on Saturday, Chairman Connally (D., Tex.) of the Foreign Relations Committee said that aparently tensions were less.

Connally was one of the most cautious in comment on the Korean situation.

"It has been referred to the United Nations, hasn't it?" he said. "Well, we'll just have to wait a while and see what they do."

Senator Wherry (R., Neb.), the GOP floor leader, was the most outspoken of the Republican critics.

"You wouldn't expect anything else with the China policy we've got of waiting till the dust settles," Wherry said.

"This is further proof that Secretary of State Acheson, instead of sitting on the fence, should take the lead against any recognition of Red China and say flatly that this Administration will refuse recognition. The whole thing is a result of our China policy."

Senator Smith (R., N.J.), of the Foreign Relations Committee said the United States has a "moral responsibility for the infant Korean republic" and "can't let the Koreans down."

Smith said two steps are urgent: Supplying South Korea with arms and ammunition needed for defense, and insistence that the United Nations take action.

Senator Russell (D., Ga.), member of both the Armed Services and Foreign Relations Committees, declared:

"I believe we have a responsibility to assist South Korea."

The move, he said, came as a complete surprise to Congress and, he believed, to the State Department and defense agencies.

Senator Hunt (D., Wyo.), called for a meeting as quickly as possible by the Armed Services Committee, of which he is a member, to get the full picture from military chiefs.

"The question we have to decide is whether to have a showdown now or later," Hunt said.

Senator Knowland (R., Calif.), an Armed Services committeeman, called for immediate U. N. action and said that if the Security Council becomes a "mere debating society" or lets itself be snarled up by a Russian veto, "the people of Korea may lose their freedom while people talk."

Chairman Kee (D., W. Va.), of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, took a mildly optimistic line.

"My view is, from what I know of the situation at the moment, that the government of South Korea is in fairly good position to take care of itself," Kee said. "I don't see anything that the United States can do at the moment other than to press the case before the U. N. Security Council."

House Republican Leader Martin (Mass.) confined himself to the remark that "this is a situation that gives the United Nations a real opportunity to show leadership for peace."

House Democratic Leader McCormack (Mass.) said:

"One has to wait to see what develops, but this one thing is certain—it shows that you cannot trust the Communists. Stalin and his gang are out to control the world."

Tass Tells Russians South Korea Started It

Moscow, June 25 (AP).—Tass reported that the Ministry of Internal Affairs of the Korean People's Democratic Republic (North Korea) says South Korean forces started a general offensive all along the thirty-eighth Parallel early today.

The declaration further stated that South Korean forces penetrated from about a half-mile to over a mile into North Korean territory in the region of western Khyadyu and in the area of Kymchon and Chervon.

Another Tass dispatch from North Korea said a subsequent declaration of the Ministry of Internal Affairs claimed the South Korean forces were repulsed after the surprise attack and that the People's Army and Guard Detachments then opened a counter-offensive which took them up to six miles into South Korean territory.

These two statements by Tass are the only news here of Korean developments.

The pendant disappeared from a locked jewel box which Mrs. Gould kept at the Hotel Provence—largest hotel in this Riviera resort town—for safekeeping. Police said the jewel box lock had not been forced.

Everything at Steak!

By Albert Parchey Mesirow

"MEN," observed my most devoted friend and severest critic, "are all intent on writing their own memorials. The conqueror builds a monument, the emperor names cities for himself, and the smaller fry resort to such extremities as buying space in The Washington Post to see their names in print!" An indignant denial died on my lips. Can the zealot explain his zeal to the realist? Can the crusader rationalize his exuberance? Ours is a dedicated breed. The restaurateur believes that the sensory enjoyment of food is a wholesome and desirable thing; that food, properly prepared and tastefully served, is nourishment for the spirit as well as the body; that gastronomic appreciation is a language that transcends the barriers of speech, race, creed and political beliefs. To spread this philosophy we hold to be at once our duty and our privilege. It would be a wonderful thing for the world if our distinguished Washington restaurateur, J. Willard Marriott, could extend his chain of Hot Shoppes around the world and behind the Iron Curtain. No cold war could long withstand the onslaughts of good, hot food! But who can explain these things to a woman? So I will just go on, trying to make good food seem as good to you as it is. And hoping you like it.

At this time of year, you're likely to hear considerable discussion of the members of one of America's oldest and most delightful families . . . the Collins family. Some people prefer Tom, some say John is much nicer and still others like Rum. All three are jolly good fellows, splendid companions on a hot afternoon and in spite of their frosty frigidity, remarkably warming and soothing. We treat them all with impartial deference and respect; squeeze fresh lemons for them, garnish them with the finest fresh fruits and fill them with the choicest liquors: Fleischmann's gin for Tom and John, and a superior brand of imported rum for the third. An introduction to any member of this famous family costs only 50 cents at Parchey's, 19th and K Sts. N.W.

In a recent article in the Saturday Evening Post, William Hazelett Upson told of his "reducing diet" that lost him 30 pounds in three months. It is really a "stuffing" diet. You fill up with as much protein as you can hold, and thus kill your appetite for the sweets and starches that put on avoirdupois. I wish Mr. Upson could sample one of our filets mignon. Here is the "reducer" supreme. A great, thick, man-sized piece of toothsome beef, specially cut from the tenderest Tenderloin of corn-fattened cattle; then dipped into a magically tasteful searing-sauce and broiled to the exact, mathematical degree of perfection that your own personal taste demands. It is served to you smothered under a mouth-watering blanket of delicate mushrooms, cooked to the perfect moment of flavor peak and swimming in vitamin-rich natural beef juice, delicately flavored with a soupcon of wine and tantalizing herbs and spices! This is in truth a "filet magna." It is ample in quantity and delicious enough to stifle your appetite for starches and sweets. But, just in case you're not trying to reduce, you're also served a great, heaping platter of crispy, mealy French fried potatoes. The garden-fresh crackly-crisp heart of lettuce that goes with the meal will add no weight, nor will the Roquefort dressing (creamed with buttermilk) that is also a specialty of our house. This filling, satisfying, appetizing filet dinner costs only $2.75 at Parchey's, and is highly recommended for reducers. Try it. Come to 19th and K Sts. N.W.

Text of Statement by Ambassador Gross on Korean Situation Before United Nations Security Council

unprovoked attack by the North Korean forces, in the view of my government, constitutes a breach of the peace and an act of aggression.

This is clearly a threat to international peace and security. As such, it is of grave concern to my Government. It is a threat which must inevitably be of grave concern to the governments of all peace and freedom-loving nations.

A full-scale attack is now going forward in Korea. It is an invasion upon a state which the United Nations itself, by action of its General Assembly, was has brought into being. It is armed aggression against a government elected under United Nations supervision.

Such an attack strikes at the fundamental purposes of the United Nations charter. Such an attack openly defies the interest and authority of the United Nations. Such an attack, therefore, concerns the vital interest which all the members of the United Nations have in the organization.

The history of the Korean problem in the United Nations is well known to you. At this critical hour I will not review it in detail. But let me recall only a few milestones in the development of the Korean situation.

A joint commission of the United States and the Soviet Union for two years sought unsuccessfully to agree on ways and means of bringing to Korea the independence which we assumed would automatically come when Japan was defeated. This two-year deadlock prevented 38 million people in Korea from getting the independence which it was agreed was their right.

My government, thereupon, sought to hold a four-power conference at which China and the United Kingdom would join the United States and the Soviet Union to seek agreement on the independence of Korea. The Soviet Union rejected that proopsal.

The United States then asked the General Assembly to consider the problem. The Soviet Union opposed that suggestion. The General Assembly by resolution of November 14, 1947, created the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea.

By that resolution the General Assembly recommended the holding of elections not later than 31st of March 1948, to choose representatives with whom the commission might consult regarding the prompt attainment of freedom and independence of the Korean people. These elected representatives would constitute a national assembly and establish a national government of Korea.

The General Assembly further recommended that, upon the establishment of a national government, that government should in consultation with the commission constitute its own national security forces and dissolve all military or semi-military formations not included therein.

The General Assembly recommended that the national government should take over the functions of government from the military command and from the civilian authorities of North and South Korea, and arrange with the occupying powers for the complete withdrawal from Korea of the armed forces as early as practicable and if possible within 90 days.

Elections were held in South Korea and the commission did observe them. A government in South Korea was set up as a result of the elections observed by the commission. The commission was unable to enter North Korea because of the attitude of the Soviet Union.

The temporary commission in its report to the third session of the General Assembly stated that not all the objectives set forth for it had been fully accomplished and that in particular, unification of Korea had not yet been achieved.

Notwithstanding the frustrations and difficulties which the temporary commission had experienced in Korea, the General Assembly at its third session continued the commission's existence and requested it to go on with its efforts to bring North and South Korea together.

One aspect of the resolution adopted by the third session of the General Assembly should, I feel, be particularly emphasized. The general assembly declared that a lawful government had been established in Korea as a result of the elections observed by the commission and declared further that this was the only lawful government in Korea. This is a most significant fact.

The General Assembly declared further that the government of Korea was based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the United Nations commission.

In the light of this declaration, my government on January 1, 1949, extended recognition to the government of the Republic of Korea, and more than 30 states have since that time also accorded recognition to that government.

The United Nations commission worked toward the United Nations objective of the withdrawal of occupation forces from Krea, the removal of the barriers between the regions of the North and South and the unification of that country under a representative government freely determined by its people.

In 1949, as in 1948, the commission's efforts to obtain access to North Korea which included both direct intercourse with the northern authorities and endeavors to negotiate through the government of the USSR were fruitless. The commission was unable to make progress either toward the unification of Korea or toward the reduction of barriers between the Republic of Korea and the northern authorities.

The commission reported to the General Assembly that the border of the thirty-eighth Parallel was becoming a sea of increasingly frequent exchanges of fire and armed raids, and that this constituted a serious barrier to friendly intercourse among the people of Korea. The commission observed the withdrawal of United States forces, which was completed on June 19, 1949.

Although it signified its readiness to verify the fact of the withdrawal of Soviet occupation forces from North Korea, the commission received no response to its message to the USSR and therefore could take no action.

At the fourth session, the General Assembly again directed the commission to seek to facilitate the removal of barriers to economics, social and other friendly intercourse caused by the division of Korea. The General Assembly also authorized the commission on October 21, 1949, in its discretion, to appoint observers and utilize the services and good offices of person, whether or not representatives of the commission. The United Nations commission on Korea is presently in Seoul and we have now received its latest report.

Mr. President, I have tabled a draft resolution which notes the Security Council's grave concern at the invasion of the republic of Korea by the armed forces of North Korea. Hhis draft resolution calls upon the authorities in the north to cease hostilities and to withdraw armed forces to the border along the 38th parallel.

The draft resolution requests that the United Nations commission on Korea observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the 38th parallel and keep the security council informed on the implementation and execution of the resolution.

The draft resolution also calls upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the carrying out of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

U. S. Resolution Calls For Action by U. N.

Lake Success, N. Y., June 25 (U.P.).—Text of U. S. resolution on Korea:

Recalling the finding of the General Assembly in its resolution of October 21, 1949, that the Government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government "having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the temporary commission; and that this is the only such government in Korea;

Mindful of the concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions of December 12, 1948, and October 21, 1949, of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations Commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

Noting with grave concern the armed invasion of the Republic of Korea by armed forces from North Korea;

Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace,

1. Calls upon the authorities in North Korea

(a) To crease hostilities forthwith; and

(b) To withdraw their armed forces to the Thirty-eighth Parallel.

2. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea

(a) To observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the Thirty-eighth Parallel; and

(b) To keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

3. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

"HI, PARTNER!"

Yes, Partners—In Building, Developing, and Using For Everybody's Benefit, The Greatest System of Highways in the World!

EVERY TIME you meet a truck on America's highways, you meet—not just a "truck"—but a partner. A partner with whom you share the use and benefits of the great highway system you both pay taxes to build.

—A partner who drives his truck safely, courteously, cheerfully. Who is first to stop and help when you are stalled with engine or tire trouble. Who strives to make his record for safe driving the best there is.

—A partner who, by being the major connecting link between farms and markets, makes modern farming possible. Who is indispensable to American agriculture as you know it today. Who transports farm production, all or part of its way to food factories and stores and thence to your home.

—A partner who has helped to bring the country nearer to the city—to develop hamlets into villages and villages to towns. Who helps bring you everything you eat, buy, use or wear—from your morning milk to the clothes you wear on your back.

—A partner who is not only your partner but the partner of all American industry. Who brings the raw materials to plants; then fans out the finished products to America's retail stores and to your very door, so that everything you eat, buy, use, or wear can come to you at prices you can afford to pay.

What's more: A partner in highway construction and maintenance, who pays about one-third of all taxes paid by all motor vehicles for highway use. But—a partner who uses only a relatively small portion of the highways, all of which are open to you.

Yes—you, and the trucks, and the busses, are partners—in one of the greatest enterprises in the civilized world.

For you, and the trucks, and the busses, pay the taxes that build and maintain America's wonderful highways.

—And use these highways to help make the American way of life the finest the world has ever seen.

Crisis Being Studied By President, Aides

son and Johnson, but the President cut them short after a few shots.

"That's all," he told them crisply. "We've got a job to do."

With that he and the two Secretaries walked off to his car and hurried to a dinner-conference at Blair House, where his chief military advisers were awaiting him.

Those at the Blair House meeting, in addition to Acheson and Johnson, included Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, just returned from Japan; Army Secretary Frank Pace, jr., Navy Secretary Francis P. Matthews, Air Force Secretary Thomas K. Finletter, the commanding officers of the armed services, and top officials of the State Department.

The meeting broke up at 10:50 p. m. The participants slipped out of the back door without being noticed by the crowd in front of the building.

Presidential Press Secretary Eben Ayers told reporters he could say absolutely nothing about the meeting except that the President probably would see Acheson and Johnson again today.

Most of those at the Blair House meeting had taken part in morning and afternoon meetings at the State Department and the Pentagon.

All had declined to talk to reporters, although one of them, hurrying from one meeting-place to another, remarked that this was "the same old business" as in the 1930s, when Germany, Italy and Japan were launching their surprise aggressions.

Before the President left Kansas City for Washington he had tried to minimize any sense of crisis in the sudden weekend developments in Korea.

"It could be a dangerous situation, but I hope not," the President told reporters, asking them not to make the situation look "alarming."

But the atmosphere in Washington was tense, just as it was on the equally hot Sunday on this very weekend of June, 1948, when the Administration decided to send the airlift into blockaded Berlin.

Unlike the Berlin crisis, which had been developing for weeks, the Korean invasion was carefully and secretly planned—so secretly, indeed, that American diplomatic and military intelligence appeared to have been caught flat-footed by it.

The first news of it reached the State Department in a United Press dispatch about 9 o'clock Saturday night. The first official confirmation came from Ambassador John J. Muccio in Seoul, the south Korean capital, at 10. Officials hurried in for emergency meetings, and at 2:30 in the morning had decided to summon an emergency meeting of the Security Council.

The American U. N. resolution, sketched out at the night meeting, did not mention Russia as instigator of the North Korean attack. It looked as if the State Department were trying, at the beginning at least, to handle this as a straight attack by northern Korea against southern Korea.

But last year the U. N. commission in Korea had described the north Korean government as a creature of Soviet military occupation. The commission found that the Soviet Union had lent countenance to warlike utterances by North Korean leaders, and had supported them in their truculent refusal to cooperate with the U. N. mission.

The Soviet government announced the withdrawal of its occupation troops from North Korea at the end of 1948, but the North Korean government would not let the U. N. commission come in to verify the withdrawal.

Military leaders here have conceded privately that South Korea could never be defended against a full-fledged invasion by Communist China or Russia or both. But up to a few weeks ago they were hopeful that the American-trained South Korean army could stand up against the Soviet-trained North Korean army—provided the South Koreans would fight.

So far 27 nations have recognized the South Korean government; 48 nations voted in the last United Nations Assembly, against the 6 of the Soviet bloc, to keep the U. N. Korean Commission in existence. When Dulles was in Korea last week he cited this record to stiffen Koreans' morale. He praised the work of the freely elected South Korean government and said:

"The American people give you their support, both moral and material, consistent with your own self-respect and your primary dependence on your own efforts," he said.

"We look on you as, spiritually, a part of the United Nations, which has acted with near unanimity to advance your political freedom, which seeks your unity with the the North, and which, even though you are technically deprived of formal membership, nevertheless requires all nations to refrain from any threat or use of force against your territorial integrity or political independence.

"You are not alone. You will never be alone so long as you continue to play worthily your part in the great design of human freedom."

Queuille May Get Call for Paris Cabinet

Paris, June 25 (NYHT).—Political speculation on candidates to succeed former Premier George Bidault centered today on Radical-Socialist Henri Queuille, who headed a Cabinet from September 1948 to October 1949, and Rene Pleven, Minister of National Defense in the Bidault government.

There were indications, meanwhile, that developments in Korea might influence the old coalition of radicals, Popular (Catholic) Republicans and Socialists to patch their domestic quarrels and give the nation a new government in the face of the disquieting news from the Far East.

Jules Moch, former Socialist Minister of Interior, said "the situation in Korea is much more serious than our ministerial crisis." Moch also said the Socialists, whose demand for civil service pay raises overthrew Bidault's Cabinet yesterday, ought to participate in a new government.

Rene Mayer, Radical-Socialist Minister of Justice for the Bidault regime, was another name to be reckoned with as Vincent Auriol, the President of the republic, continued his talks with party leaders tonight in an effort to find a Premier-designate with a program that would win the National Assembly's confidence.

Outside official quarters the nation was taking the government crisis in a light hearted manner. President Auriol, himself, was a visitor at the Longchamps race track.

The party leaders who were received by the President told the press outside the Elysees Palace that they thought a Premier-designate might be found Monday.

Church War Backfire Perils East German 'National Front'

Berlin, June 25 (U.P.).—The East German government's war against Protestant and Catholic churches tonight threatened to break up the "National Front" through which Communists control 17 million East Germans.

Otto Nuschke, chairman of the East German Christian Democratic Party and a deputy premier in the Communist-dominated government, charged his own state with using "police measures against the church."

Western officials believed this religious conflict heralded a split in the East German state that Communists would have more trouble healing than any political dispute.

Nuschke spoke as the Soviet Union paved the way for East German entrance into the Cominform. Through their official German language newspaper in Berlin, Taegliche Rundschau, the Russians welcomed the "German democratic Republic" into their orbit and told other Communist countries to follow suit.

The price of East German admission to the Cominform was treaties with Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary signing away German claims on the territories of those neighboring countries.

Western officials believed the admission of East Germany to the Cominform would lead to negotiation of a separate peace treaty between Russia and its satellite here.

In West Berlin, meanwhile, 100 top writers, artists and intellectuals flown here in a "cultural airlift" prepared to open a five-day "Congress for Cultural Freedom" Monday.

Nuschke, one of the founders of the East German state, made his attack on his own government in a speech at Dresden yesterday. Even though he tempered his remarks with pledges that his party would remain in the "National Front," Western observers believed it was a sign of a serious breach.

No Amerasia 'Fix' Found, Prober Says

A Senate investigator said yesterday that "nothing remotely approaching a fix" has been found in the 1945 Amerasia case and that Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark may be called as a witness in the stormy inquiry.

The statement was made by Edward P. Morgan, chief counsel for the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigating the affair. During an interview over NBC's "Meet the Press" television program.

Clark was head of the Justice Department's criminal division in 1945 when the affair broke. Morgan said he may be called to clear up why there was a delay of a few days in the arrest of the six principals in the stolen-secrets case.

Secret FBI Recording

Meantime, the Justice Department was expected to release a portion of a secret FBI recording which should prove whether John S. Service leaked wartime military information to Philip J. Jaffee New York greeting card manufacturer and chief figure in the case.

"I have every reason to believe that the Justice Department will make available adequate portions of the recorded conversation in order to fairly and adequately protect the interests of Service," Morgan said.

Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.) claims the transcript will show that the 41-year-old State Department career officer gave Jaffe certain secrets during a meeting in the Statler Hotel here in April, 1945, after warning him they were top secret. Service has denied the charge under oath.

Admits Decision Difficult

While admitting it would be difficult to reach any decisions on Amerasia in an election year, Morgan said the subcommittee's final report will be "honest and founded on the record." He said it should be issued before too long.

He said information received by the investigators so far does not show that Service gave Jaffe any restricted military data.

If Clark is called, he said, it will be to clear up why the late Defense Secretary James Forrestal requested the FBI to hold up the Amerasia arrests for fear of embarrassing President Truman in his delicate negotiations with Russia.

Subcommittee Chairman Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.) previously had voiced hope the FBI transcript would be available by this morning when Service is scheduled to be questioned again behind closed doors about his associations with Jaffe.

Atomic Research Developing Way to Detect Ailing Heart

The Nation's atomic chief said yesterday a method has been developed which may detect oncoming heart disease as much as 15 years before the usual symptoms appear.

Sumner T. Pike, acting chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission said researchers also have done experiments on cancer "which seem to give us a clue as to the location of some cancers which couldn't previously have been found.

He cautioned that neither experiment has been completed "so it is well not to be too sure of them." But he said both show great promise.

In an interview prepared for broadcast by the Gannett News Service, Pike also said that:

1. "There is great reason to hope" that the United States can develop a hydrogen bomb.

2. "There are prospects that the Navy will have an atomic-powered ship "perhaps well within this decade." The prospects are not so good for an atomic airplane, and virtually nonexistent for an atomic automobile.

Discussing the application of atomic energy to medical work, Pike said :

"We have had a very interesting piece of work done which seems to give us almost complete diagnosis of oncoming heart disease—the ordinary heart disease that kills nearly half of our older folks," he said.

"We may possibly be able to tell five, 10 or 15 years before any clinical symptoms show up the people who may be in danger of having hardening of the arteries .

"Many feel it looks as though some dietary changes could stave off such developments.

North Carolina Upset

Willis Smith's victory over Senator Frank P. Graham in the North Carolina run-off on Saturday appears to have surprised the politicians as well as the public. In the first primary a month ago Senator Graham held a lead of 53,000 votes over the strongest of his three opponents. Now Mr. Smith, a former president of the American Bar Association, has won by about 20,000 votes in spite of the strong support given to Senator Graham by Governor Scott. There is some feeling, however, that Governor Scott went too far in his support and that his efforts to line up highway employes for Senator Graham had a boomerang effect.

What is most interesting about the outcome is its effect upon the Truman Administration. Senator Graham has been a warm supporter of the President. Before he came to the Senate in 1949, to fill an unexpired term, he had served on numerous boards and commissions by presidential appointment, including the President's Committee on Civil Rights. On the contrary, Mr. Smith is an outspoken foe of many Administration policies. He campaigned most vociferously against the fair employment practices bill, the Brannan plan, the President's medical-aid program and deficit financing. While his stand was not completely anti-Truman, there can be no doubt that his election to the Senate in place of Frank Graham is a blow to the President. The seriousness of that blow is emphasized by the fact that North Carolina has followed the lead of Florida. Neither of these States joined the Dixiecrat movement in 1948, but both have unmistakably revolted against the President's leadership of the Democratic Party.

The White House has tried to maintain the fiction that only a handful of reactionaries in the South are out of step with the President's program. In keeping with that theory the President excluded Governor Thurmond of South Carolina and Governor Wright of Mississippi (the Dixiecrat team that opposed him in 1948) from his luncheon in honor of Democratic Governors last week. But Florida and North Carolina have proved that the schism between the Southern and Northern segments of the Democratic Party neither begins nor ends with the Dixiecrat rebellion. The cleavage is both widespread and deep. It suggests that, whatever may be the President's influence upon voters elsewhere, he is losing his own party in the South where it has traditionally been strongest.

Bidault Goes Down

There is no use disguising the fact that the fall of the Bidault government in France, coming as it does in the midst of the international discussions on the Schuman plan, is a serious development. The prospect that a new government having some assurance of stability can be formed while the conference remains in session is in question. The responsibility for the situation rests with the Socialists and the small group of deputies allied to General de Gaulle. A permanent and effective collaboration between the Socialists and such a party as the Popular Republicans was rendered impossible because of the Socialists' necessity of competing with the Communists for the support of the urban working classes. They could not therefore enter into any durable alliance with a government committed to the policy of holding wages to present levels as a check upon further inflation. Nor could the dominant party in the government change this policy without sacrificing its support among the other parties of the right center. Thus some months ago the Socialists found it discreet to withdraw from the government, though they continued until recently to support it in the Assembly.

At the same time they felt themselves obliged to take up the cause of the civil service employes, one of the groups which have suffered most severely from the inflation, and to champion their demands for increased pay. It was ostensibly on this issue that the Bidault government went down. In the test vote the Socialists were joined by the Communists, voting as usual en bloc. M. Bidault called immediately for a motion of confidence from the Assembly, and was defeated by a vote of 352 to 230. Of this adverse majority, however, the Communists, Socialists and their leftist allies accounted for only about 275, a good many less than were needed to defeat the government. Thus it was the Gaullists and other elements of the political right which swung the balance against M. Bidault.

The probable explanation of this action is also a matter of party tactics. It is to be found in the fact that the Assembly no longer represents the division of political sentiment in France. All recent developments appear to have strengthened the political right at the expense of the center. Thus the Gaullists and the elements sympathetic to them believe it to their interest to force a dissolution of the Assembly and a general election. Under the constitution of the Fourth Republic this becomes mandatory when two governments elected by the same Assembly have been defeated on a vote of confidence. Thus it is barely possible that the fear of a Gaullist triumph in a general election will be strong enough to hold the next French government together until next year.

Long Way Around

The law, inexorable in its workings, has required that the pathetic band of 106 refugees brought here from Shanghai must return to Germany, where their Odyssey began, before they can find asylum in the United States. But the law has been tempered in this case with imaginative kindliness through the intervention of President Truman and intelligent action by the Department of State. Most of the weary travelers, it is believed, will be able to return to this country after they have secured visas and had their records checked. It is a pity that, pending such certification, they must cross the sea again and carry on tentative existences as temporary residents of a displaced persons camp in Germany.

Their long, long journey began when they fled to China to escape Hitler's tyranny. They settled in Shanghai and began life anew. But the spread of communism in the Far East brought them under the sway of another form of totalitarianism. They fled again and were brought to San Francisco by the International Refugee Organization. It was their peculiar misfortune, however, to arrive before the amended DP Act had become law and without the documentation necessary to qualify them for admission to the United States. They were transported in a sealed train to Ellis Island, where the immigration officials allowed them to remain until a means could be worked out through which they would be enabled to retain their DP status. The disappointment that will be felt over their temporary exclusion is mitigated by recognition that all the American authorities who dealt with their problem did so with a humanity that must always be the distinguishing characteristic of a democratic society.

The Lost Souls

In a recent address to the faculty and students of the Russian Institute of Columbia University, Mr. George F. Kennan, Counselor of the State Department, defined a position in which, it seems to us, reasonable men may take shelter from the current tempest of accusation and recrimination over the Communist conspiracy. To understand the nature of the crisis provoked by the conspiracy, Mr. Kennan implied, we must learn to make an important distinction between communism and those who have embraced or have been attracted to it. This distinction apparently is analogous to that drawn in Christian theory between sin and sinners. Thus while it is correct to consider that communism, considered as a system of concepts concerning the relation of the person and the state, is "something which is not only hostile but hopelessly committed to that hostility, something we must either destroy or be destroyed by," we must not lose sight of the fact that the Communists themselves, whatever their guilt, are human beings like ourselves.

To forget or to ignore this, said Mr. Kennan, is to fall into two very dangerous fallacies.

> The first is that this force of evil is something entirely outside ourselves: the expression of some inexplicable wickedness, conceived far away and without relation to us, a wickedness of which we ourselves can be, and are spotlessly innocent.
> The second is that there are no gradations involved in the influence of this force on people: that it is either like the mumps or pregnancy—either you have it or you don't; either you are or you are not, and those that are are lost to all good purposes . . . They are like the villain at the happy ending of the movies: we feel no obligation toward their moral reconstruction.

These attitudes are dangerous precisely because they tempt us into obliviousness to danger.

> If these people are lost to themselves and society, as I am sure most of them are in the sense that they have placed heavy handicaps on their ability to contribute anything positive to their own peace of mind or to general progress, if today they find themselves dedicated to a negative and destructive cause, this is because they had certain vulnerabilities and weaknesses which are common to at least an important percentage of human beings, if they are not present in some degree in all of us, and because these vulnerabilities and weaknesses were discovered and exploited by others who were already embittered against the world which had fostered them . . . Let us not be too haughty to give thoughtful and dispassionate attention to these same vulnerabilities and weaknesses which cause people to become the agents of totalitarianism. Perhaps we will find some of them in ourselves.

It is the counsel of common sense, surely, to try to reclaim these lost souls, just as it is the object of our foreign policy, through the Voice of America and other media, to try to reclaim the lost nations.

MORALITY

Morality itself, what we call the moral quality of a man, what is this but another side of the one vital Force whereby he is and works? All that a man does is physiognomical of him. You may see how a man would fight, by the way in which he sings: his courage, or want of courage, is visible in the word he utters. In the opinion he has formed no less than in the stroke he strikes. He is one; and preaches the same Self abroad in all these ways.

—Carlyle, Heroes and Hero-Worship, pp 106-107

Beloved, others looked on you and said
That you were tall, and that your eyes were sweet;
They praised the sculptured beauty of your head,
The moving eloquence of hands and feet.
And, having seen you thus, they dared believe
They knew and understood the whole of you;
But I, in that first moment, could perceive
Beforehand what the years have shown as true:
Could see you unembittered in the day
Of seeming failure (triumph still to me);
Could see that you would have the strength to stay
Where perils were that lesser men would flee.
So, finding you more brave than you were fair,
I half forgot the color of your hair.

Korea: Danger Spot

Such is the deterioration in Soviet-Western relations that there will be no question in anybody's but the Communist mind that the invasion of Southern Korea is of Soviet origin. Northern Korea is a Muscovite creature; the army above the thirty-eighth parallel would not move without orders from the Kremlin. Yet the attack on Southern Korea, accompanied, it is reported, by a declaration of war, came from Northern Korea with Korean forces. That is the physical fact of the aggression; it is this fact upon which attention must fix and to which American policy is addressing itself.

It would be foolhardy to pin the responsibility formally on the Russians. The only realistic way of dealing with the periodical boils that must be expected from Stalinism is local treatment. Treat a boil as local—and lance it. If Moscow wishes to make it an all-out issue between Russia and the West, then be prepared to deal with that, too. But leave it to the Russians to force the issue. It is in the readiness to act immediately that there is recognition of the universal context in which local aggression is nowadays couched. This is what prompted the American call upon the U. N. Security Council for action on Korea.

Help to Southern Korean defense is undoubtedly a difficult as well as a delicate problem. But that, of course, is the reason that an overt attack was launched there. Soviet imperialism moves through its puppets like an amoeba, always into soft spots, halting only in the face of obstruction. On this theory Secretary Acheson has built his foreign policy of creating "positions of strength." Korea is a soft spot—a potential Bataan for a defending non-Korean force supplied by sea and air, and will remain so no matter how much effort is expended in trying to make it a strong position.

So, however, was Berlin. Here the Allies were out on a limb when the Russians struck—that is to say, they were stuck on a too-forward post, with Soviet territory between their position and their supply base. But that did not deter the Americans and the British. With a matchless ingenuity and a magnificent resourcefulness, they organized the airlift, and eventually they triumphed. Berlin provides the object lesson for Korea. Treat this attack as a local problem, mobilize a way appropriate to both the situation and the circumstances to solve it, and in the meantime so act that the Southern Koreans, like the Berliners, will be sustained in their resistance.

Korean resistance is all-important; indeed, a sine qua non. Without the stanch support of the freedom-loving Berliners, the airlift would have been a victory without meaning. The Koreans still have to be proven. But their will-to-resist depends in no small measure upon Allied encouragement. It is fortunate that Ambassador Muccio is a seasoned diplomat with a mettle that was tested and not found wanting in Berlin. Some 150 American officers are training the Korean army. The ECA and other missions have a personnel of over a thousand, and, in addition, there is a United Nations mission which supervised the May election and reported that the Seoul government is the only representative assembly throughout Korea. These aides are the sign and symbol of Allied helpfulness in making Korean independence real. Under their ministrations morale is held to have improved enough to warrant the compliment from John Foster Dulles in his speech last week to the Korean Parliament.

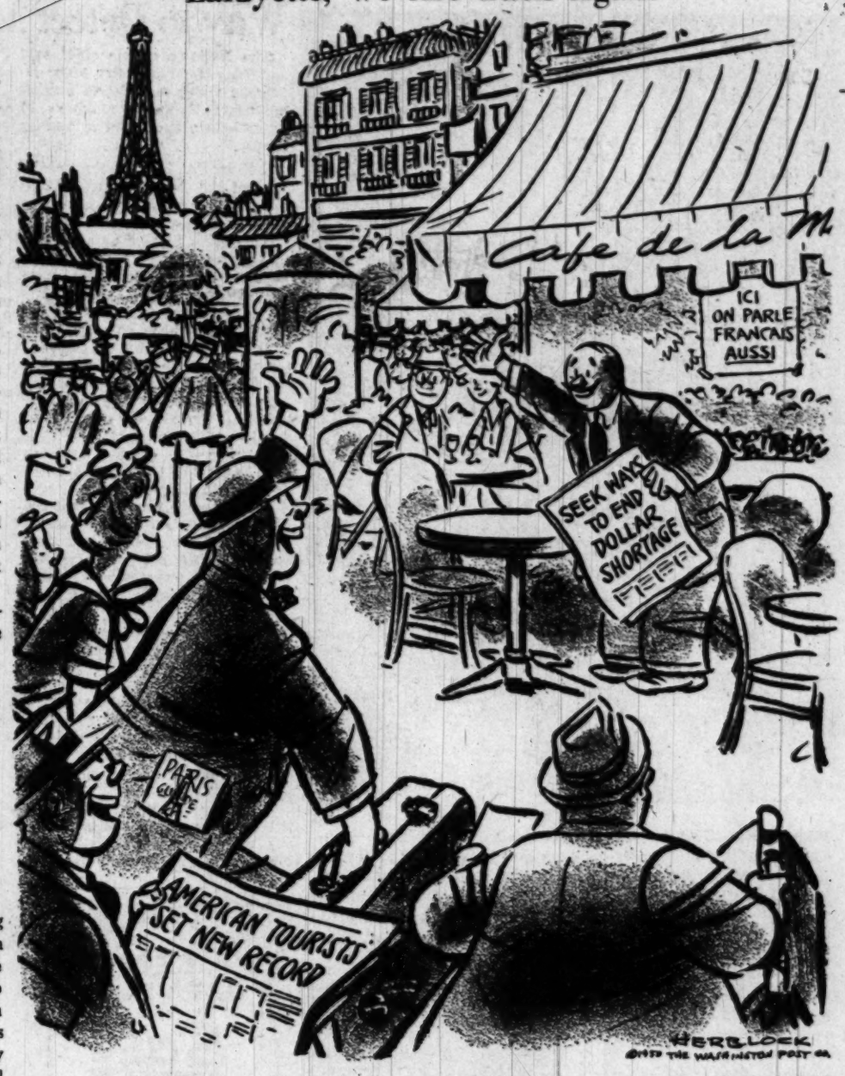
In this speech Mr. Dulles stated an obligation as well as paid a compliment. He said:

> The American people give you their support, both moral and material, consistent with your self-respect and your primary dependence on your own efforts. We look upon you as spiritually a part of the United Nations, which has acted with near unanimity to advance your political freedom, which seeks your unity with the north and which, even though you are technically deprived of formal membership, nevertheless requires all nations to refrain from any threat or use of force against your territorial integrity or political independence.

In this spirit, presumably, the resisting Koreans would be sustained by America under the self-defense provision of Article 51, whatever the United Nations is able to do or not do as a universal organization in case there is no cease-fire. This country is committed to repel the aggressor by every reason of prestige in Asia and of moral obligation to the Koreans.

The danger to world peace in this explosive situation can be overcome if assistance is prompt and if the Koreans can and will do their part and if the Soviet object is simply to feel out the American intention. It is always possible, of course, that the Muscovites will overstep the mark and precipitate a general war. However, as long as the United States maintains its present economic health and strength, that would be the result, it seems to us, of accident and circumstances rather than conscious policy.

"Lafayette, We Are Back Again"



Matter Of Fact

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

Concerning Weapons

THE "NEW WEAPONS" propaganda is reaching sinister proportions. Some one had better set down the honest facts before everyone becomes dreamily deluded that the Western world can be cheaply defended with a few Buck Rogers model atomic disintegrators.

The current propaganda started, in the first place, because of the ground forces' jealousy of the publicity accorded weapons-of-the-future of the rival Navy and Air Force. The jealousy led, by the squalid, familiar route, to the usual calculated leak about ground force achievements in the new weapons field. Perhaps the best comment is the reported remark of the President, when he forbade official publication of the ground force claims.

"Why the hell," said Truman, "don't these guys pipe down?"

In the second place, the claims now being made are grossly misleading. One group of the alleged "new weapons" is actually composed of old weapons, like the recoilless gun, the shaped charge, the proximity fuse and the nonmagnetic land mine, which every informed student of defense problems has known about for years. Another group of these "new weapons" comprises weapons like the nuclear weapons for infantry and all the different varieties of guided missiles, which will not be ready for use in combat for a long time to come.

THUS THE "NEW WEAPONS" propaganda is creating the illusion of a revolution in tactics and strategy, when no such revolution has as yet occurred. This is bad enough. It is still worse, however, that this propaganda also masks one of the major scandals of the American defense effort, which is the slowness of new weapons research and development by all three services.

In his admirable book, Dr. Vannevar Bush bitterly hinted at this scandal. The Army Ordnance, for example, long neglected the adaptation to antitank uses of the recoilless gun and shaped charge, both of which existed at the end of the second war. If this adaptation has now at last been made, as claimed, it has been made late. Because of the delay, the new antitank weapons are not yet sufficiently perfected. Hence, large-scale orders cannot be placed within a reasonable time, unless research and development are greatly stepped up.

In the case of the real novelties, like guided missiles, the picture is immeasurably worse. Only about 100 million dollars a year is currently being invested in all the different guided missile projects of the three services. No field of research and development is more vast, more complex, or more expensive. Hence progress has been so slow that the first experimental mass firing of the first true, supersonic guided missile will not occur for at least five years. Nor will this delay be overcome by the botching that the services are now indulging in, such as the substitution of subsonic turboprop power plants in missiles needing supersonic speed for full effectiveness.

In short, the facts about the new weapons are far from justifying us in putting off the great intensification of defense efforts demanded by the world situation. On the contrary, only a great intensification of the defense effort will provide us with these new weapons at the time when we are going to need them, which, the Atlantic foreign ministers at Londen officially defined as 1953-'54.

In the third place, even if the new weapons are available before the time of danger, it is childish nonsense to suppose that the need for armies, navies and air forces will magically vanish. It is supposed to be a "misunderstanding" to suggest, for example, that western Europe cannot be defended against the Red Army with less than 30 to 40 powerful modern divisions.

BUT IN FACT, the American, British and French planners have only been able to make this low estimate of the European ground force requirement precisely because they assumed the new European army would be equipped with the new ground force weapons now in prospect. And if recruiting, organizing and training the new European army is delayed until after the new weapons are ready in quantity, Europe will still lack a ground defense when the time of danger begins.

Equally, air tactics and strategy will be altered, perhaps very drastically, by the perfection of the guided missiles. But it will still be essential to have a powerful tactical Air Force. And it is downright criminal to babble about the guided-missiles-of-the-future, while we do nothing to build up the tactical air strength that is needed now and can be built up now.

Such illustrations might be multiplied indefinitely. They all make one point. The time for self-delusion is over. The time for effort is at hand. And if we let ourselves be lulled out of making this effort by the hope that some day, somehow, new weapons are going to solve all our defense problems and make everyone invulnerable at low cost, we shall be inviting the destruction which our folly will deserve.

"On Perjury"

Your editorial of June 15 "On Perjury" accurately describes the basis for a perjury charge filed by the State of Washington against George Hewitt, based on his testimony about Prof. Melvin Rader before the Washington State Un-American Activities Committee. But this "unique instance" of a perjury charge against "an informer, rather than his victim," has an unfortunate sequel.

After giving his testimony about Professor Rader in Seattle, and while a local prosecuting attorney was seeking permission from the State Un-American Activities Committee to cross-examine him, Hewitt hastily departed for New York. Thereafter, the State of Washington sought to extradite Hewitt from New York to stand trial on the perjury charge, and New York's Governor Dewey executed a rendition warrant.

But Hewitt brought habeas corpus proceedings in the New York Supreme Court to resist extradition. In this proceeding Hewitt was represented not only by his own attorney, but also by Bronx County District Attorney Samuel J. Foley, who nominally appeared in opposition to Hewitt's application for habeas corpus, but who actually supported Hewitt and presented to the court a completely distorted version of the facts of the case.

Without hearing any of the evidence upon which the perjury charge was based, New York Supreme Court Justice Aaron Levy on May 12, 1949, granted Hewitt's application and ordered him discharged from custody, because Justice Levy has decided (1) that Hewitt was not guilty of perjury and (2) that the State of Washington was so thoroughly overrun with Communists that it would be sending Hewitt "to eventual slaughter" to allow his extradition.

It was after this action had been taken that the Attorney General of the State of Washington—who has stanchly supported the State Un-American Activities Committee—conducted his investigation of the case and concluded that the only reasonable conclusion to be reached was that Hewitt had lied about Rader. Because of Justice Levy's decision, it seems extremely unlikely that Hewitt will ever be brought to trial on the Washington charge.

Czech Independence

I should like the privilege of replying to Mr. de Hevesy's letter of June 20, "Hapsburg Empire."

There could be no question after the first World War of recreating the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and the Western Allies did not "connive at the destruction of this monarchy." Because of an absence of democratic principles it was fast disintegrating long before the outbreak of the war in 1914. In the Germanization program of the Hapsburgs, all Slav minorities were discriminated against, including the Czechs who fought bitterly for the slightest concessions. The Slovaks were actually terrorized by the Hungarians in the same way that Hitler terrorized all non-Germans. There was a well-known Hungarian saying that "A Slovak is not a human being."

In the light of what is happening in Czechoslovakia today, there may be those, like Mr. de Hevesy who are willing to turn their backs on a glorious chapter in the history of the Czechoslovak people in their fight for freedom from despotism. The late Jan Masaryk may have made the statement to Sir Duff Cooper in 1946 (quoted in the London Daily Telegraph April 18, 1950) that "Czechoslovakia had never been so happy as when forming part of the Hapsburg Empire."

The Czechoslovak people have been educated in the democratic principles of a great man, Thomas G. Masaryk, and unhappy as they are today, they would strongly contradict such a statement. JEAN P. LEE.

Spain's Role

Political and religious bigotry, and not reason, has since the termination of the war influenced American opinion on Spain. If communism is the menace to the world and to our own Nation, which we know it to be, then Spain deserves more favorable consideration in our thoughts than any other country. The civil war conducted by General Franco was a war against communism which, if it had established itself in Spain 10 years ago, would now be in full control of the Mediterranean.

The fairest estimate of Franco's war role is that he was working both sides of the street. When it looked as though the Axis would win he leaned toward the Axis, and when the tide was changed he began to lean toward the allies. This was not an admirable role, but it has to be remembered that Spain was weak and in an exposed position.

If Americans should have real affection for any country, it is for Spain, whence our country was discovered, and so much of our Western territory explored and its population Christianized.

Meat Inspection Cut

If the Senate upholds the budget cuts of the House that will mean 344 experienced Federal meat inspectors throughout the Nation will be dismissed.

Federal meat inspection has for many years quietly, maybe too quietly, rendered sincere, efficient and economical health service to the American public. It is a guarantee that the meat and meat food products processed in Federally inspected establishments are free from disease, wholesome and in a good sound and sanitary condition.

It takes many long years of experience, study and observation for a meat inspector to get his "Master's Degree." With one stroke of the pen many of these individuals who have made Federal meat inspection their career will be "fired" unless the Senate kills the ill conceived Tabor-Thomas and Jensen amendments to the omnibus appropriations bill. These amendments call for indiscriminate cuts of 10 percent in all Federal agencies. Already meat inspection service is operating on less personel than is advisable without considering the 10 percent cut.

Liberty Bell

I want to commend you on the constructive program you have just initiated to arouse interest in the people of the District in selecting a permanent location for the Liberty Bell reproduction which will be presented to the District on July 4.

These bells, which are being presented to the States and to the District, are magnificent reminders of the birth of our Nation, and should serve as a most effective symbol to our people of the principles and aims upon which our country was founded.

Cleaning Up The Philippines

I am for the third alternative suggested by Mr. Harold R. Isaacs (article published June 15) for "an all-out attempt to encourage a sweeping renovation of Filipino affairs by Filipinos on the basis of an American aid program directly tied to the most drastic reform program." This, to me, is the only way for the Philippines to be pulled out of its corruption and desperation.

But certain conditions preface an American aid program. The policy makers and administrators concerned should (1) cancel all existing contracts based upon graft or United States war surplus transactions; (2) confiscate all tangible properties or interests therein including investments, deposits and cash of those who profited from graft on United States war surplus assets in the Philippines; (3) keep Filipino or American profiteers in the Philippines.

(4) Make a foolproof investigation of stock sellers in Philippine ventures under the American Flag who have not obtained permission first from the Securities and Exchange Commission; (5) make available for recovery in the name of the Republic of the Philippines all confiscated properties and cash wherever they are situated; (6) declare as legal owners those who have actual possession of properties and cash on behalf of unknown or undisclosed principals or title holders, and (7) admit established and proven American procedures on any Philippine adjudication of claims. A big portion of the more than two billion dollars of American riches lost in the Philippines thus can be retrieved or salvaged.

The Philippines is approaching ½-billion peso deficit during the end of its fourth year of independence. It will soon face payment of its indebtedness under law, and it cannot exist the way it is without aid. Let us turn to the aid angle. With American know-how under a Point IV plan or any other arrangements and with governmental aid or private corporate financing plus guaranteed profits, the Philippines should stand ready to contribute its present and available materials and investments on the Philippine rice and corn agency which, in spite of the fact that Filipinos are born rice-eaters, has not solved the perennial rice problem.

The Philippine abaca and other fibers agency, which fell heir to Japanese interests that made Davao province in Mindanao what it was to the Japanese before World War II, should be utilized. The Philippines cocoanut agency should be attended to because this all-important supplement and complement of the Philippine economy also enjoys preferential position under present laws.

The Philippine tobacco agency which alone paid Spanish imperialistic demands from the days of the tobacco monopoly in the eighteenth century should be revived. The national power agency, for which a loan was asked from the World Bank, should await constructive criticisms and suggestions from men like Prof. Roy Stanley Swinton of the University of Michigan who taught hydraulics in the Philippines.

The desired objective of every right-thinking Filipino or American or other friends of Filipinos is to place the Philippines into a position where Filipinos, rather than consume others' incomes, can work, can produce and can create income.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Trygve Lie And The U. N.

MANY HARSH and resentful things have been said about Mr. Trygve Lie's efforts to save the United Nations. They stem from a belief that the United Nations is not really worth saving. The harshest critics regard the U. N. as a platform for Soviet propaganda; others feel with Dorothy Thompson that the U. N. is a disappointment and that it is nothing "except an inconclusive forum."

Lippmann

Now with great respect for Miss Thompson, I should like to say why I believe she is mistaken in her estimate of the United Nations. Before I do that I should say, however, that no more than she do I expect the U. N. to settle the conflict with the Soviet Union or to bring about disarmament or to accomplish great things along the lines outlined by Mr. Lie in his recent "20-year program for achieving peace through the United Nations."

Nevertheless, I hope and pray that he will be successful in preserving the United Nations. For I believe the foreign policy of the United States and of the Atlantic community would be quite unworkable if the United Nations dissolved. On the other hand, the Soviet Union has shown by staying out of most of the activities of the United Nations that its foreign policy is largely, though not entirely, independent of the United Nations. There is good reason to think that on balance we have far the greater interest in the survival of the United Nations.

TO APPRECIATE the value of the United Nations one has to travel in fact, or at least in imagination and in understanding, to the borderlands of the Atlantic community and then beyond the Western world into the Middle East and Asia. In all this vast area—in central and eastern Europe, in the Middle East, in Pakistan and India, in southeast Asia, we cannot offer to form military and political alliances. It would be a preposterous diplomatic inflation if we attempted any such thing. Nor would the offer of alliances be accepted by most of these countries. They can work with us and we can work with them only within the framework of a universal society—that is to say, of an organization which includes capitalist and Socialist and Christian Democratic and Communist and Titoist regimes; which is governed by monarchists and republicans and dictators and feudal lords; with members who profess all the religions and all the ideologies and have all the colors of the human skin.

Without the United Nations I do not see how the United States or our partners in the Atlantic community can hope to retain any effective influence inside Asia except where we or they intervene directly with our own armed forces. Without committing our own forces, without intervention, we have played a leading, and on the whole constructive, part in three great and troubled areas of Asia, in Palestine, in Indonesia, and in Kashmir. That has been possible only because of the United Nations.

IT IS HARD to see how in the end there is to be any honorable and decent way out of the Formosa muddle and the Indo-Chinese mess unless it is found through the United Nations—that is to say, unless the influence of a large number of relatively disinterested nations, including the leading nations of Asia, can be brought to bear.

Anything we now do unilaterally in Formosa will almost certainly be suspect, not only in the Soviet orbit but in most of Europe and in most of Asia. Yet we cannot stand by and see the loyal core of the Nationalists exterminated. We cannot risk having them migrate to the Philippines, thus transplanting the Chinese civil war and Chinese intrigue and Chinese corruption into the Philippines. Nor can we maintain Chiang in Formosa as permanent conqueror and carpetbagger over the abused and helpless Formosans. We need the help of other nations. We need their help as the British needed it in Palestine and in Greece, as the Dutch needed it in Indonesia, as the French will need it in Indo-China. We shall need help to extricate ourselves decently from a situation which is no longer manageable by our own power and influence alone.

I AM afraid that the Kremlin realizes better than Mr. Trygve Lie's American critics how necessary is the United Nations to the diplomatic influence and action of the Western nations. That is why the Soviet Union is so unconcerned about the prestige and the effectiveness of the United Nations.

On the other hand, the Kremlin knows enough about the sentiment of mankind to realize that no nation can afford to be held responsible, as Hitler and Mussolini with the League, for the breakup of the United Nations. The many different nations within the Soviet Union and the great multitudes everywhere would regard the second failure of the universal society as the ominous and certain sign that a universal war was imminent. In the terrible foreboding and panic which would then be aroused, no government could count on the wholehearted support of the masses, and few governments on their complete loyalty.

The Kremlin cannot, therefore, afford to destroy the U. N. But it does not need a U. N. which works. It needs only a U. N. which exists. We, on the other hand, need a U. N. which works well enough to permit us to collaborate with the great masses of the peoples and their governments who are outside our alliances.

That is why we have to hope that Mr. Lie will succeed, and that our partners and friends will find a way, since we are estopped from doing so, to help him to succeed.

A Communication

Democratic Struggle Of South Korea Cited

THE RECENT KOREAN national election on May 30 is of special interest to the American people. First, it was held at the insistence of the State Department that the constitutional provisions of the new government should be carried out to the letter; and secondly, it was the first time in the 4000 years of Korean history that a free election was held without foreign aid according to true democratic procedure.

The general election of May 10, 1948, was sponsored by the United Nations Commission on Korea, and was aided by the American military and civilian occupation authorities. The election itself was held in a free atmosphere according to the provisions in the resolution of the United Nations General Assembly, but the mechanics of it, even to the extent of furnishing the ballot boxes, was provided by the American military command.

This time everything was done by the Koreans themselves, from the electioneering to the final counting of the ballots. Some 2000 candidates campaigned furiously for the 210 seats in the National Assembly. It was truly a free for all fight—but according to rules.

More than 7,400,000 of the 8,300,000 eligible voters went to the polls, a turnout of 89.3 per cent. Party lines were not very sharp, nor platforms much different. The people judged each candidate individually and voted for the best man.

WHEN votes were tabulated, independents with no party labels formed a clear majority. Some observers consider this a defeat for President Rhee's Nationalist Party. But the truth of the matter is that the election was not a defeat or victory for any party or group, but an expression of the will of the people to choose the best men among them to conduct their national affairs.

Two years ago many intellectuals took no part in the organization of the new government, fearing that the formation of a separate nation in south Korea might permanently divide the country and destroy the last chance of uniting the American and Russian zones. It is clear by now that all hope of uniting the two sections of their country peaceably is gone, hence the all-out support for the only democratic government they have, the government of the Republic of Korea (south). Many of them ran for the Assembly and were elected. Some of my personal friends, Cho So Wang, the former Foreign Minister of the Korean Provisional Government in exile during World War II, and Paik Sang Kyu, a Brown University graduate, are among them.

Enemies of South Korea call it a police state, and its President a dictator. But they overlook the most important role President Rhee has played in taking the new nation through its difficult infancy. If it had not been for the stern and immovable stand against Communism taken by Syngman Rhee during the past two years, South Korea would be in the hands of the Communists today, and the only kind of election permitted would not be an election at all, but a confirmation of a one-party Communist slate.

South Korea's occasional similarity to a police state in its suppression of subversive activities fades in comparison to the situation north of the thirty-eighth parallel. North Korea has been reduced to a Russian colony. It isn't even a satellite. There are no Titos or Mao Tse-tuns; only the figurehead Kim Doo Bong and the ignoramus Kim Il Sung who aren't even puppets. If it is a satellite, it is a third or fourth rate one.

WILL PRESIDENT RHEE have trouble with the independents when the new Assembly convenes on June 19? Not any more than he has had in the past. During the past two years rambunctious members of the National Assembly, including some of Rhee's own party members, took special delight in attacking their President and his policies. Many a time I felt as I listened to their debates, that their criticism of their chief executive was unnecessary and uncalled for. When they rejected Rhee's nomination of Lee Yoon Young for Premier, the only reason for the rejection advanced was, "He is not well known." If it were in the United States, I thought, the Senate would not reject a qualified cabinet nominee of the President on such ground as that.

But the saving grace of the Korean National Assembly is that, while its members may indulge in a political binge in the heady atmsophere of the new freedom, whenever they face a crisis or issues of vital national importance they are guided by sober judgment. This was proven by their drastic action in curbing inflation and balancing the budget last April in compliance with Secretary Acheson's stern note of April 7 that South Korea must balance its budget or face the discontinuance of ECA aid. In view of the coming election, it was a courageous action on the part of the Assembly members to reduce government expenditures and raise taxes. But they accomplished the almost impossible.

The members of the new Assembly—and I know many of them personally—are level-headed men. They may attack their President and fight among themselves—all Koreans love a good fight—but they will unite in promoting the security of their nation and the welfare of their people. The wise Syngman Rhee accurately judged the situation when he said: "I don't think the independents will make trouble for the government. I think loyal opposition is essential to democracy."

the deadline and most of those which could not reach destinations before strike time were cancelled.

F. J. Gavin, president of the Great Northern, said "it will be some time before we can determine the effect of the strike on the railway."

The railroad reported that supervisory employes were being used as switchmen at points where the strike affected operations. Picket lines were reported in areas adjacent to Great Northern yards and division points.

The Denver and Rio Grande, with not a wheel turning after its 400 switchmen struck, announced the layoff of 8500 employes in Colorado and Utah for the strike's duration.

The strike began peacefully. In Chicago, the police department reported that only one officer was assigned to strike duty at the Rock Island yards. Acting as an observer, he took a station in a switch tower and reported all quiet.

Mediation Effort Fails

A union spokesman said pickets were stationed at yard offices and terminals of the five railroads.

The men on strike are, for the most part, yard employes who operate manual switches.

Efforts of the National (railway) Mediation Board to avert the strike continued until a few hours before the walkout. Francis J. O'Neill, jr., board chairman, wired Union President Glover a request that the strike be postponed until Tuesday when he has scheduled a meeting with two other unions to discuss the presidential board's 40-hour week and 18-cent raise proposal.

Glover replied immediately that he did not agree to any postponement.

Efforts to head off the walkout collapsed Friday night.

The railroads had accepted a presidential board's recommendation for the 40-hour week and 18 cents an hour hike made June 15. The board's recommendation was made in a case involving the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors. It is these two unions which will meet with O'Neill Tuesday.

Law Delays Other Strike

The presidential board also recommended that its proposal be applied to the AFL Yardmasters of America and that the switchmen settle on the same terms.

However, the switchmen and yardmasters were not parties to the presidential board hearings. A 30-day "cooling off" period prescribed under the Railway Labor Act prohibits a strike of the trainmen and conductors until after July 15.

But the switchmen and yardmasters were free to strike, having waited out all strike-delaying provisions of the law.

The yardmasters called the board's report an "insult" but did not announce what action they would take.

In Riverside, Calif., Dr. Gordon S. Watkins, a member of the presidential board, said the strike is "totally unjustifiable."

He called the board's decision an "excellent adjustment" and one better than normally has occurred in other industries. Dr. Watkins, provost of the University of California at Riverside and a former economics professor, termed the strike a move by the switchmen to "gain prestige," adding that in his opinion, they are working to get a better settlement than they hope the trainmen and conductors will get.

Railroad management said the switchmen's walkout might be followed by a nation-wide strike of the conductors and trainmen July 15. Heads of these two unions have called a meeting in Chicago for July 10 to decide what they will do.

The walkout is the nation's second big railroad strike in 40 days. The May 10-15 strike of the locomotive firemen and enginemen against five key rail systems was called off when both sides agreed to submit unsettled issues to binding arbitration.

Schools' Need of Money Cited

ing power of schools, abolition of child labor and the enforcement of compulsory attendance have all caused enrollments to soar in public schools, the NEA reported.

The Nation's school teachers, who make up the membership of the NEA, say the country is able to support public schools adequately enough to meet the problem if it wishes to.

If the Nation doesn't spend more money the educational crisis that has grown more acute each year since the end of the war will become increasingly a cause for national alarm.

The teachers present their case in an annual report, "Our School Population," made public yesterday by Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of NEA.

Here are some of the ills the teachers cited for the school year just ended:

A third of a million children in public elementary schools—urban and rural—attending on half day sessions.

Untold thousands attending enlarged classes or going to schoolrooms set up corridors and basements of schools, or in rented stores, churches and auditoriums.

A fifth of school buildings in use in city school systems from 50 to 80 years old. Sixteen percent of city children attending school in buildings erected prior to 1900.

Children trained by nearly 100,000 teachers who lack educational requirements for permanent appointments.

What can the Nation do about these conditions? Spend more money, say the teachers.

In 1930, 3.09 percent of the national income went to education. By 1940, it had dropped to 2.88 percent. Today it is down to 1.84.

"Aids to learning such as films, projectors, radio and laboratory apparatus demanded for preparation to live in an increasingly technical and scientific world cost money.

"At current costs of building, it will take at least 10 billion in the next 10 years to put decent roofs over the heads of our school population," the NEA reported. From six to eight billion more a year are needed for teacher salaries.

As for teachers, 77,084 were needed in the school year just ended to take care of replacements due to death, resignation and other causes and to take care of new enrollments, NEA said.

"At the present rate," the NEA added, "we can expect a total of only 250,000 to 300,000 teachers during the next decade to fill 750,000 positions created solely by departures from the profession and increased enrollment."

The Nation can take care of its teacher shortage problem in only one way, Given said.

"Make the teaching job socially and financially attractive enough so that students coming out of high school go into teaching."

He said teachers should receive a minimum salary of $2700 as beginners going up to $5000. The salary scale should be higher in cities, he declared.

In Washington, he said, the beginning teacher should receive at least a thousand more a year than the $2300 the high school graduate can get from the Government. The beginning District school teacher now receives a salary of $2830.

Action on Small Business Aid Still Likely, Legislators Say

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

If this session of Congress lasts until the end of August, the small businessman may yet get some long-promised assistance.

The Senate Banking Committee has started hearings on an Administration measure calling for loan insurance to banks to provide credit of up to $25,000 to small businesses. The Government insures 90 percent of the loan, but the bank is always responsible for 10 percent of the loan in order to be certain banks examine carefully the economic feasibility of the proposition.

Chairman Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.), who has been pressing for more than a year for aid to small business, declared yesterday he is confident Congress will enact some type of this legislation IF it stays in session long enough.

Maybank said that if Congress is to enact a tax bill this session it will have to be in session until the end of August.

Although Maybank had been urging small business aids for so long and although the Congressional Record is full of column upon column of talk abut what both parties would like to do for small business, it was not until the middle of May the Administration measure was drafted.

Capitol Hill politicians in both parties are frank in recognizing the political nature of the move. Small business has traditionally been the stronghold of Republicanism and it is obvious that the President, an adroit politician, has recognized a field ripe for political conversion.

Another Administration measure to aid small business was introduced by Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.). This would give the Reconstruction Finance Corp. broad new powers to encourage loans to small businessmen.

Lucas' bill would permit the RFC to give weight to past and prospective earnings and management skill in passing on loan applications. Under existing policy, loans are tied closely to the security that the borrower can provide.

Maybank has also introduced a bill providing for the appointment of a small business coordinator to work directly under the President. The coordinator would receive $15,000 a year to dovetail the activities of all Government agencies in "furtherance of the interests of independent small business concerns."

Although observers generally have interpreted President Truman's plans for small business aids a trend to the right, Democrats at least expect the Republicans to polish up the "state socialism" war cry against the measures.

Whatever tack the GOP may take, small businessmen should not let their hopes rise too high at the moment. There is a lot of political dueling still in view before the actual economic aspects of small business aid are whipped into law.

Senate Votes Today on Bill To Give CCC Additional Funds

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

American farmers will be told this week, probably Thursday or Friday, what the Government's farm price supports for basic commodities will be this year.

Ordinarily made months earlier, the year's most important Agriculture Department announcement, was delayed because Congress delayed voting additional funds for the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry on the 1950 program.

The Senate will vote at 4 p. m. today on the measure. It already has passed the House. The bill will give CCC permission to borrow an additional two billion dollars from the Treasury for price supports. This will raise the total borrowing authority of CCC from 4750 million dollars to 6750 million. In addition, CCC has 100 million dollars capital that it may employ in the price maintenance program.

This week's announcement is expected to deal only with the six basic crops—wheat, corn, cotton, peanuts, tobacco and rice. The law requires that they be supported at 90 percent of parity. However, the Agricultural Act of 1949 also provides a strange gimmick, a dual parity standard.

This standard provides that the support level of the six basics shall be based either on a new parity formula or on an old formula, whichever is the higher. The new formula is based on the average of all prices in the last 10 years. The old formula uses the price level of 40 years ago—1909 to 1914—as a base. As a result, three basics—corn, wheat and cotton—will be supported on the old parity, and peanuts, rice and tobacco on the new formula.

Agricultural officials weeks ago let it be known that they were prepared to announce the price levels as soon as the CCC bill is passed. However, now that passage seems assured today, a further delay is in the works. The June Bureau of Agricultural Economics price analysis is due Thursday. It will contain the June parity figures. By waiting, the new support prices will be based on the latest parity figures.

It is not expected that many farmers will complain. The June parity is expected to be a few cents higher than the May figures.

At any rate, the price support levels this year will be a few cents a bushel or pound higher than last year. This reflects the gradual increase in prices since last year.

Turks Reject Accusation

Istanbul, June 25 (AP).—Turkey today vigorously rejected Bulgarian accusations of hostile activities on the Turkish-Bulgarian frontier.

The semiofficial Anatolia news agency said the Bulgarian government delivered a protest note yesterday to the Turkish minister in Sofia, after the slaying of a Turkish newspaper correspondent by Bulgarian frontier guards.

It followed by one day a Yugoslav claim that Bulgarian troops, in full battle dress and supported by armored vehicles, had been moving in the past few days toward the eastern frontier of Yugoslavia.

This report, which came from Tanjug, Yugoslav official news agency, offered a hint that Russia and her satellites may be intensifying their pressure on the Yugoslav government to break down the display of independence that has shown signs of developing among other neighboring countries.

Yesterday's Bulgarian note accused three Turkish citizens of penetrating Bulgarian territory in a jeep on the night of June 10 to "perpetrate hostile acts."

In rejecting the accusations, the news agency said, the Turkish Foreign Ministry declared:

"If the Turkish government's aim had been to further disturb Turko-Bulgar relations there would be no necessity to have recourse t osuch means since opportunity is provided by Bulgaria's systematically unfriendly and hostile acts toward Turkey."

America Bank Defies Court In Expansion

San Francisco, June 25 (U.P.).—L. M. Giannini, president of the Bank of America, announced last night that his sprawling banking empire—the world's largest—will take over 22 western banks Monday, despite a restraining order issued by a Federal court.

Acting after the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals refused to dissolve the restraining order it issued Friday, Giannini announced that the purchase of the banks from Transamerica Corporation "is an accomplished fact."

"The transaction is an accomplished fact by operation of law," he declared. "Under authorization from proper agencies of Government, this institution was irretrievably committed, before receipt of the restraining order, to assume the assets and liabilities of the selling banks. Contracts accomplishing the transfer had already been fully executed and approved."

The restraining order was obtained from the court on Friday by attorneys for the Federal Reserve Board, which is now engaged in antitrust action against Transamerica Corporation. Board action was taken at almost the same instant Transamerica announced sale of the 22 banks for about 18 million dollars.

Eugene Meyer Lauds Hebrew Academy at Cornerstone Rite

The Washington Post

FOR THE FUTURE—Hyman Viener, left, member of the board of directors of the Hebrew Academy, and Harry Klavan, secretary of the board, put time capsule into academy's cornerstone

The cornerstone of the new Hebrew Academy of Washington was laid yesterday at 16th st. and Fort Stevens dr. nw.

In a message read at the ceremony, Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of The Washington Post, paid tribute to the academy as a monument "to the Jewish contribution to American life."

"It is a testimonial to the freedom that Jews have been granted here and to their use of that freedom," the message said. It was read by Bernard Danzansky, president of the academy.

"The American concept that governments are instituted among men to secure inalienable rights is challenged today by a totalitarian system that denies the worth of the individual personality and derides all the values of freedom," Meyer said.

"Let us hope that in the years to come freedom will be made secure, not here alone but for all men everywhere—that in the day when this cornerstone is uncovered the attack upon the dignity and integrity of the human personality will have become an incident in history like the barbarian invasions of the still more distant past," he said.

"In that day, perhaps, men will have realized their fundamental brotherhood. May this Hebrew Academy serve toward the attainment of that goal," Meyer said.

After the ceremony, the message, which was addressed "To Posterity," was placed in the cornerstone along with various records and messages from other dignitaries.

The school, which will cost about a half million dollars, will contain facilities for about 450 elementary and junior high school pupils.

School officials hope it will be completed in time to be used for the opening of the fall semester in September.

Classes have been held for several years in the old Curtis School building at 3235 O st. nw.

Electrical Union Agent Suspended For Discrimination

Harry Van Arsdale, jr., business manager of the New York local of the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, yesterday received a three-year suspension from office for discriminating against union locals outside his city.

Union President D. W. Tracy said execution of the suspension order would be "withheld" so long as there is no further discrimination.

He said the Local 3 executive prevented electrical materials manufactured outside New York by other IBEW locals from being bought by electrical contractors and jobbers there.

Tracy said his decision was based on findings by Prof. Douglas B. Maggs of Duke University Law School, referee in hearings on the charges filed last October 29. The referee found Van Arsdale exercised "controlling influence" over Local 3 during the period of an alleged leave of absence from January 1, 1947, to May 16, 1948.

French Church Official Hails Schuman Plan

By Martha J. Hall
Post Reporter

Dr. Marc Boegner, one of six presidents of the World Council of Churches, yesterday hailed the Schuman plan of Franco-German cooperation as opening the way for "a peaceful Europe and a peaceful world."

Dr. Boegner, who is also president of the Reformed Church of France, spoke at three church services in Washington.

In the morning he brought fraternal greetings to American Protestants from French Protestants at a service at National Presbyterian Church, Connecticut ave. and N st. French Ambassador Henri Bonnet was present for the service.

Later he spoke in French at the service of the French Protestant Congregation of Washington at St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette sq. In the evening he preached at the regular service at St. John's.

Political and social upheavals during France's years of war, occupation and liberation shook the nation to its very depths, Dr. Boegner said.

The Reformed Church of France, he said, has voiced its support for Foreign Minister Robert Schuman's proposal for European industrial cooperation as a step of first importance in preventing war and realizing peace.

Dr. Boegner said that the French Protestant Church, through the World Council, feels the unity in Christ of all of the Protestant churches of the world.

Since it was organized in Amsterdam in 1948, the council has made great progress the French leader said. He is visiting the United States to attend a meeting of the world body's central council at Toronto, Canada, this summer.

One of the major problems to be discussed at the meeting, Dr. Boegner said, is the relation between minority and majority churches in such places as Latin America.

After two and one-half centuries of persecution, the French Protestant Church itself is a small minority, he said. In France there are between seven and nine million active Roman Catholics and about one million Protestants.

The majority of the French, about 30 million, he continued, belong to no church. This situation led one writer to term France a "mission field", Dr. Boegner said.

Young Faces Thoresen in Dakota Race

Bismarck, N. Dak., June 25 (AP).—Though most of them have been more concerned about the late spring than politics, North Dakota voters will take time out Tuesday for the State's primary election.

Republicans and Democrats will nominate one Senator, two Congressmen and a full slate of State office candidates for each party. They will vote on five measures and pick candidates for the State Legislature.

Many candidates say there has been a general lack of interest in the campaign.

As usual, the big fight is between two factions of the Republican Party—the Republican Organizing Committee, which now controls the State administration, and the Nonpartisan League.

There are only three Democratic contests.

The ROC generally is regarded as representing the more conservative wing of the GOP. The ROC is headed by United States Senator Milton R. Young, seeking reelection, and third-term Gov. Fred G. Aandahl, who is running for Congress. The ROC has campaigned on what it calls its record of "good, efficient government, free from machine politics."

The league is headed by Senator William Langer, who is not up for reelection but who has been active in the campaign, and Frank Vogel, long-time league leader and its candidate for Governor.

The league has pledged a 25 percent reduction in State expenditures, if elected, and has hammered hard at the ROC's handling of the State Highway Department.

Young is opposed by T. H. H. Thoresen of Grand Forks, former Lieutenant Governor and one-time political enemy of Langer.

Besides Aandahl, Representative Usher Burdick and Martin Stenehjem of Minot, both Leaguers, are in the race for the two GOP Congressional nominations. (North Dakota Congressmen are elected at large).

Vogel is opposed by State Senator Norman Brunsdale of Mayville, farmer and businessman for Governor.

The Democrats have done little or no campaigning. In the only contests, Harry O'Brien, Park River weekly newspaper publisher, and Joe Kyllonen, Lakota, World War II veteran, seek the senatorial nomination; Ervin Schumacher of Drayton, Edgar Agnew, young mayor of Dickinson, and E. A. Johansson of Raug, are running for Congress; Obed Wyum, Rutland, and C. G. Byerly, mayor of Mandan, are running for governor.

Graham's Defeat Blow To Fair Deal, Gov. Scott

Raleigh, N. C., June 25 (AP).—President Truman will lose a strong supporter among Southern Senators next year as a result of yesterday's North Carolina runoff primary.

Since the Democratic nomination is tantamount to election, Raleigh Lawyer Willis Smith will replace the President's friend and backer, Senator Frank P. Graham.

Smith, 62, has been a Democratic Party stalwart for more than 30 years, but he campaigned as an opponent of much of the fair deal program. He said administration policies are leading the Nation toward socialism.

Smith says he opposes the FEPC, the Brannan farm plan, "socialized medicine," and other items in the Truman program. He wants an immediate end to deficit spending.

With returns in from virtually all of the State's 1990 polling places, Smith had a lead of about 20,000 votes. The remaining precincts were in sparsely settled sections. Smith's total was 277,672 to 257,156 for Graham.

The vote was a rebuff for North Carolina's Gov. Kerr Scott. His appointment of Graham to the Senate 15 months ago on the death of Senator J. Melville Broughton was the State's biggest political surprise in years. Scott stumped the State in the campaign in support of his appointee.

[Republican National Chairman Guy G. Gabrielson said in Washington yesterday that the defeat of Senator Graham is "another repudiation by the people of the Administration's socialistic program." He said "The voters of North Carolina have demonstrated that they are fearful of big government and its controls over the people's lives and liberties."—Editor's note.]

Arlington League Asks Veto Of Hatch Act Amendment

The Arlington Better Government League last night asked President Truman to veto amendments to the Hatch Act and to resubmit to Congress for hearings the question of proper penalties for Government workers indulging in party political activity.

Harley M. Williams, league chairman, said Senators Harry Byrd and Willis Robertson, Representative Howard W. Smith and the Arlington Democratic Executive Committee, all of Virginia, backed the changes because they "are concerned only about the loss of local offices by the Byrd-Smith machine to Federal employes running as nonpartisan candidates."

"The fact that neither civic organizations nor employe groups were consulted regarding this bill and only 'machine' stalwarts were given a chance before a congressional committee clearly indicates that the measure was not intended to benefit Federal employes or the communities in which they reside," he added.

Perlman Bats 100 Pct. Before Supreme Court

Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman had a 100 percent batting average before the Supreme Court this past term, "a record never before equaled by any Solicitor General in history."

That statement was made by Attorney General J. Howard McGrath in a letter to President Truman, made public yesterday. McGrath said Perlman won all 12 cases he argued on the Government's behalf, including "some of the most important cases in this generation."

In reply to McGrath, Mr. Truman wrote that "Mr. Perlman's work brings great credit to himself, the Justice Department and the United States Government. I honor him for it and want you to tell him so."

McGrath wrote to the President he said, because of the effort of Republicans in the Eightieth Congress to defeat confirmation of Perlman. That nearly successful fight was led by Senator Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.).

The most important person in America

He has helped make this country the best fed, best clothed, best housed, best educated nation in the world . . . He has helped raise our standard of living to twice what it was in your father's time.

He has helped provide more and better machines, through the loan of his savings to business . . . making it possible for men to turn out more products per hour worked.

Who is this person who is doing so much for America? He is you, the saver.

These savers are the 80 million people in America who own life insurance, and the millions who have savings accounts or own bonds or other securities.

The drive toward better living—the nation's moving force—depends upon the saver.

3 ways to protect the buying power of your savings

1. Do your share to help lessen the pressures on Government for more spending. When we keep asking Government for more services, more benefits, we must expect to pay for them . . . Remember, it's your Government.

2. Back up all efforts to balance the budget. When Government lives beyond its income, prices tend to rise, reducing the buying power of your savings. Remember, you're the saver!

3. Support economy—elimination of waste. Whatever Government spends, you pay either directly in taxes or indirectly in prices. Remember, it's your money.

Protecting the buying power of savings—encouraging savings—is, like freedom, EVERYBODY'S job. In this belief, the life insurance companies and their agents bring you this message. They know that when Americans have the facts they make the right decisions.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

CLEVELAND, JUNE 25.—Hank Greenberg, the working vice president of the Cleveland Indians, sounded very brash last April when he coauthored a magazine article entitled "Cleveland Will Win the Pennant."

At that time, the Indians were a very dim fourth choice behind The Red Sox, the Yankees and Detroit, and Greenberg's boast was properly suspect as mere bravado. In fact, he was accused of trying to sensationalize in the manner of his predecessor, the master, Bill Veeck.

POVICH

Two weeks ago Greenberg was willing to admit he had miscalculated, and had overrated the Indians. Now he's sorry he weakened on his original prediction. "The Indians are going to take it," he was saying today.

And the big reason, he says, is Luke Easter. "He's giving us the punch we weren't getting. He's made the Indians look like a different team," says Greenberg. "We were waiting for the day when that big guy would get squared away, and he's gone and done it."

THE TRANSFORMATION of Easter from a floundering giant to a dangerous slugger Greenberg credits to the club's disposal of Mickey Vernon. "Easter picked up from that moment, when he no longer had to battle Vernon for the job. His confidence came back and he started hitting the ball like we knew he could."

Easter has been hitting the ball, in fact, unlike a lot of folks knew he could. They'd heard tales of his tremendous home runs in the Coast League, but he was a complete flop in the majors until a week ago. In Cleveland they're wondering now if anybody ever hit a longer home run than the pitch he rammed into the upper deck of the Cleveland Stadium the other day.

They were booing Easter in Cleveland until last week. His hitting was no worse than Mickey Vernon's, but the fans were resenting the let-down in their expectations. The 220-pound giant always looked as if he should hit the ball out of the lot and when he didn't, the customers reacted with ugly mood. That fact was behind the deal when Greenberg determined on the happy inspiration of getting rid of Vernon. It left Easter as the only first baseman in town.

THE INDIANS are now being built according to the specifications of Greenberg, who makes no bones about his preference for players in his own image, who can hit the ball a long way. With Easter, Larry Doby and Al Rosen stacking up in the middle of his batting order as a home-run-hitting trinity, Greenberg is happy about the whole situation.

"I never did think it was the Detroit pitching that won those pennants for the Tigers," says Greenberg somewhat immodestly. "I always did believe that the home runs that Rudy York and I used to hit had a whole lot more to do with it. There's no substitute for runs in bunches and I'll take slugging ahead of speed on the bases and those other factors."

He pointed out that the streamlined clubs like the Cardinals and Dodgers, when they got into the World Series with the Yankees, were simply overpowered. He rationalizes about the failure of the Red Sox with the simple statement that "no team ever had the slugging to offset Boston's kind of pitching."

EVEN IN A YEAR when Lou Boudreau and Joe Gordon have failed the Indians, Greenberg still likes his club's chances. "Look around the rest of the league and show me a solid ball team," he challenges. "The more you look, the more you have to like the Indians with what we can throw at them in the way of pitching, home runs and reserves."

It's in the department of reserves that Greenberg believes Cleveland has a distinct edge. "The odds are against the Tigers going through the season without accidents. If they lose one man out of their infield and outfield, I'd say they're sunk. The Indians aren't that thin on the bench."

Going into today's program with the Nats, the Indians had been doing very well indeed. They'd won 10 of their last 11 games, and surged into third place, only 2½ games behind the Yankees, only 5½ from the lead. And as these lines were being written, Al Rosen just homered with the bases full to beat the Nats, as if to lend emphasis to what Greenberg has been saying all along.

Lloyd Beaten By Harper, Jim Demaret Tops Gafford

Columbus, Ohio, June 25 (U.P.). Aging, arthritis-crippled Henry Picard and tall Chandler Harper scored smashing upsets to reach the semi-finals of the PGA golf championship today when they knocked off the tournament co-favorites, Johnny Palmer and Lloyd Mangrum, respectively.

Picard, 43, wearing a regular golf glove on his left hand and a white pallbearer's glove on his right—and munching aspirins at times—concocted nine birdies in smothering Palmer, 10 and 8. The 37-hole 1939 victor over Byron Nelson in the PGA finals has been taking pills for his arthritis, and wearing the white gloves—he had a dozen in his bag—to combat sweaty hands.

Harper fought off a closing bid to score a 1-up triumph over the dapper Mangrum.

Meanwhile, as a blazing sun baked the Scioto Country Club course, Jimmy Demaret of Ojai Calif., moved into the semifinals against Harper with an easy 5 and 4 victory over Ray Gafford of Fort Worth, Tex.

Williams Ousts Douglas

Henry Williams, jr., of Secane, Pa., earned the right to face Picard by scoring a mild upset win over Dave Douglas of Wilmington, Del., 1 up.

When 128 pros started this grind last week, nobody gave Picard a qualifying look, let alone a chance to reach the semifinals. He hasn't won a tournament since 1945.

Picard threw a four under par 35-33—68 at his 31-year-old rival from Badin, N. C., on the morning 18 holes and, as Palmer shot a 38-36—74, the veteran Cleveland pro moved to a commanding 6 up lead. After lunch, Picard was still strong with an outgoing two under par 34 as Palmer fired a 37 which left him nine down.

And then, on the twenty-eighth hole, Picard shot a steady par and Palmer bogeyed the hole to bow out, 10 and 8.

Birdie Wins For Harper

Mangrum, the 1946 National Open champion, made a gallant effort to come back against the 33-year-old Harper but the tall shotmaker from Portsmouth, Va., was unshakable when they came down the stretch.

Harper, eight under the card for 36 holes, was four up over Mangrum, winner of $8100 this month, at the end of 21 holes, but had to stave off a fast finish by the tourney favorite as the thin man with the mustache squared it on the 30th. Harper clinched it with a deuce on the 35th hole, after laying a stymie, and clung to his one up edge with a halving bird on the final hole where he canned a seven-footer.

Williams boasted a four-up advantage over Douglas, 32-year-old Newark, Del., professional, at the end of eight holes, but the tall guy from the East whittled away at the lead and pulled up alongside at 24th, 27th, 31st, and 34th, only to lose, one down, on the 36th to Williams' birdie, the result of a twisting, eight-foot downhill putt.

One down on the second hole against Gafford, Demaret pulled his game together and fired a morning 37—34—71, which put him four up on his Texas rival at 18 as Gafford shot a 36—39—75. From there it was easy going for the colorful Demaret.

Quarterfinal Round Results

Columbus, Ohio, June 25 (AP). Results of the 36-hole quarterfinal round today in the National PGA Golf Tournament.

Jimmy Demaret, Ojai, Calif., defeated Ray Gafford, Dallas, Tex., 5 and 4.

Chandler Harper, Portsmouth, Va., defeated Lloyd Mangrum, Niles, Ill., 1-up.

Henry Williams, jr., Secane, Pa., defeated Dave Douglas, Newark, Del., 1-up.

Henry Picard, Cleveland, defeated Johnny Palmer, Badin, N. C., 10 and 8.

Tomorrow's 36-hole semifinal pairings:

Demaret vs. Harper.
Williams vs. Picard.

Grand Slam By Rosen in 8th Takes 1st For Indians

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Cleveland, June 25.—Cuba and the Nats got an even break today in a doubleheader with the Indians. Their boy, Sandalia Consuegra, evened it up with a 5-3 victory after Cleveland beat his countryman, Conrado Marrero, 7-6, in the first game.

Marrero, too, was apparently on his way to victory in that first game when he had the misfortune to bump into a bases-full homer by Al Rosen in the eighth inning.

Consuegra needed a bit of a lift from Mickey Harris in the ninth inning of the second game when his 5-2 lead dwindled on Ray Boone's lead-off home run over the left field fence. When Sandalio walked Avila, Harris was rushed into action with none out.

Harris did very well after a shaky start. He walked Murray to put the tying run on with none out, then bore down. Pinch-hitter Lou Boudreau sacrificed the runners along and Harris then took complete charge. He struck out Pinch Hitter Allie Clark on a 3-2 fast ball, and on the next pitch Kennedy popped up to end the game.

Homers Score All Tribe Runs

When the Indians weren't hitting homers, they weren't scoring at all today. But they packed six homers into the twin bill, and all 10 of their day's runs jogged home after out-of-the-park blasts.

In that second game, the Nats made their recent Mickey Vernon-Dick Weik deal look somewhat better. Weik made his first start for the Indians, walked seven men and lasted only five innings. The Nats made only five hits in that second game, but Irv Noren got into the home run act finally.

Noren boosted Consuegra into a 2-0 lead in the third inning with a long swat over the rightfield wall after Weik had walked Yost. In fact, he made three of the Nats' five hits, driving in three of their runs.

Sam Dente gave Consurgra two more runs to work with in the fifth inning after Noren led off with a single to right and Weik walked Mele. With two out, Dente unloaded a solid single to center that scored both.

Doby Ruins Consuegra's Shutout

Consuegra was hot stuff for seven innings, pitching shutout ball and holding the Indians to six hits. And then after two were out in the eighth, he walked Easter and was clouted for another of the Indians' homers, by Doby, who rammed the ball far over the right field fence.

The Nats wrenched their fifth run out of reliefer Chico Pieretti who made the error of walking Consuegra to start the ninth. Yost beat out a bunt, but on another bunt by Combs, Consuegra was forced at third. Noren, though, delivered a run-loaded single to right center.

And the Indians could get only one run back in their ninth.

Marrero couldn't hold a 4-1 lead in that first game, and Early Wynn emerged as the winning pitcher despite his failure to last out the ninth. At that point, the Nats were trying to wipe out a 7-4 deficit, but with the tying run on third Vernon fouled out.

Doby's homer put the Indians in a 1-0 lead in the second, and then Vernon moved the Nats in front with a three-run blast over the right field fence in the third. Mele followed immediately with a homer to left and the Nats had a 4-1 lead.

Wynn steadied after that, and shut the Nats out without a hit for the next five innings. The Indians meanwhile went to work on Marrero's lead and narrowed it to 4-3 in the sixth when Boone led off with a homer to left, and two outs later Wynn himself homered over the right field barrier.

Marrero had one out in the Indians' eighth when they tied into him. Mitchell singled to right. With two out, Easter doubled to

Bosox Take 2 From Browns, 11-5 and 8-2

St. Louis, June 25 (AP).—The Boston Red Sox swept a pair of games from the St. Louis Browns today—11 to 5 and 8 to 2—to give them four straight triumphs over the Browns. The second game score was the lowest the Red Sox made in the series during which they pushed in 43 runs.

Walt Masterson won the second game, striking out seven Brownies and giving up eight hits for his second victory.

Nagy, Welteroth Sent Back To Minors in Pitcher Swaps

CLEVELAND, June 25.—Manager Bucky Harris discarded Pitchers Steve Nagy and Dick Welteroth today to bring a pair of new faces to the mound staff of the sagging Nats.

From their Chattanooga farm club they brought up Southpaw Al Sima in the swap for Welteroth. Nagy went to San Francisco in a no-cash deal for Righthander Elmer Singleton.

Nagy's departure signaled the finish of his comeback to the majors, after a brilliant start this season when he beat the Yankees twice in a row. The 30-year-old southpaw was knocked out in his next seven starts and left with a 2-5 record.

Welteroth saw little action with the Nats this season.

Harris was impressed with Sima when he saw him pitch against the Nats in Florida. A 190-pound righthander, he compiled an imposing 6-2 record with the seventh-place Chattanooga team. Formerly he was owned by the Giants and pitched for Minneapolis. He is a curve-baller.

Singleton has been used mostly in relief roles by the San Francisco club. He is a six-two, 175-pounder, and will join Mickey Harris in the Nats' bullpen.

Detroit Wins, 6-3; Newhouser Beaten, 8 to 2

Detroit, June 25 (AP).—Hoot Evers blasted a three-run homer in the eighth inning of the nightcap to get the Detroit Tigers a 6-3 decision over the New York Yankees today.

The victory kept the American League-leading Detroiters three games out in front of the Yankees, who won the opener 8-2.

Evers, who hit a two-run homer to defeat the Yankees in the series opener Friday night, broke a 3-3 deadlock today by hitting one of Vic Raschi's fast balls into the left-field stands. It tagged Raschi with his fifth loss as against eight wins.

That homer came after the Yankees tied the game in the top of the eighth on a two-run pinch-hit homer by Tommy Henrich who also got one in that role Friday night.

The largest crowd of the year at Briggs Stadium—53,628—saw the Yankees kayo starting Pitcher Hal Newhouser in the opener after hitting him hard until he was lifted in the seventh.

The New Yorkers piled up 14 hits in the first game with Hank Bauer leading the parade with five for five. Bauer's biggest wal-

Ralph Kiner Wrecks Brooklyn With Two 3-Run Homers, Five Hits

Bucs Belt 7 Pitchers In 16-11 Win

Brooklyn, June 25 (AP).—Ralph Kiner blasted a pair of three-run homers, a triple, double and single and drove in eight runs today to pace the Pittsburgh Pirates to a 16-11 triumph over the Brooklyn Dodgers. Ted Beard also homered for the Pirates and Gil Hodges for the Dodgers.

Kiner's seventeenth and eighteenth homers featured a 20-hit Pirate bombardment against seven Brooklyn pitchers. The Pirate big gun also scored four runs.

The home run king's initial sock with two on in the first put young Vernon Law off to a three-run lead over Don Newcombe, who was knocked out in the third. Kiner's single opened the two-run third inning rally with two out.

The Pittsburgh star's double off Ralph Branca broke the deadlock in the seventh. He wasted a triple off Erv Palica in the eighth and made it a rout with his three-run homer off Rex Barney in the five-run ninth.

Women's Play Begins On Tuesday

Wimbledon, England, June 25 (AP).—The world famous All-England lawn tennis championships open Monday with the three top favorites in men's singles on the ailing list.

The scramble for the coveted men's crown—worn with pride by such champions as Bill Tilden, Fred Perry, Don Budge and Jack Kramer—will be the most wide open in years.

For example: Frank Sedgman of Australia, seeded No. 1, has torn ligaments in his right wrist. He played in pain during the London championships last week and fell an easy victim to Art Larsen of San Francisco in the semifinals and Jaroslav Droby, Seded No. 3 has a severely wrenched muscle in his back.

Larsen, who certainly looked like a prospective champion when he beat Sedgman, has a hand full of blisters. He's seeded No. 7.

The women take over on Tuesday with the first round of their singles.

Most of the critics have narrowed their choice here to the first four Americans—Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Calif., Mrs. Margaret Osborne Dupont of Wilmington, Del., Doris Hart of Jacksonville, Fla., and Mrs. Pat Todd of La Jolla, Calif.—who have been seeded in that order.

Southeast Wins In Arena Loop

Southeast Stores pounded out an 11-0 victory over White Rabbit Restaurant for its first Arena League triumph yesterday at Fairlawn Park. Pitcher Don McCully drove in four runs with a double and two singles.

Bill Cooper's two-run homer in the seventh inning gave Forest Heights a 9-7 edge over Ballston. Cooper had four hits. Click's Sunoco upset Jack Pry, 3-1, to move Forest Heights into first place.

Bill Benning Says:

AT DELAWARE.

DEAR FOLKS:

This meeting has been marked by many foul claims and inquiries with no foul claims, resulting in several disqualifications. The stewards have been delaying programs with regularity to look at the movies of the race in question. Haven't always agreed with the decisions. However, from the roof of the stands and from a seat at the movies, the officials are better qualified to make rulings than the writer. However, I do have a beef and so do many bettors. The announcing of a foul claim and the lighting of the objection sign are delayed too long. Last Friday, when there was an objection on the last race, several customers were on the race train waiting to pull out and did not know there was a controversy about the result. Of course we would "hold all tickets until the result is made official."—BILL.

Lariat Wins Horse Show Jump Title

By Harry de Mawby, Jr.

Roxanne Wagner's Lariat yesterday won the Potomac Hunt's seventh annual horse show with 13 points for the jumper championship.

Reserve was Avon Shockey's Red Knight with 10 points. Sky's shadow, Claude W. Owen's champion, instead of repeating last year's victory in the conformation hunter division, turned the tables by taking the working hunter championship with nine points, nosing out Cheerie McKee's Sir Pennard who scored nine points.

Virginia exhibitors accounted for the conformation hunter division with Waverly Farm's Really Rugged taking the tricolor for nine points. Eve Prime's Eve's Star was in the reserve spot with eight points. Both horses are from Warrenton.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz

New Leave Policy Due This Week From White House

A new annual leave policy for Federal workers is slated to be issued this week by the White House.

It will discourage employes from accumulating large amounts of leave. As a general rule, employes will be asked to take annual leave during the year in which they earn it.

Two or three years hence no employe will be allowed to carry over more than 60 days of annual leave from one year to another. Employes who have more than that will have to take the excess plus leave as they earn it in the meantime.

A wartime law allowed employes to carry over up to 90 days of accumulated annual leave from one year to another as leave was restricted for employes at that time. Thousands of employes still have more than 60 days to their credit.

In addition, the White House will insist every employe take a vacation each year. The length of the vacation won't be specified, but three weeks for classified and per diem employes will be recommended by several agencies. That would leave these workers 11 days to take off to attend to personal duties.

A rider to the general appropriation bill voted by the House would require all employes to take annual leave this year as they earn it or else lose it. The Senate Appropriations Committee has been informed the rider is illegal as the law allows employes to accumulate leave.

The White House order is expected to take the pressure off the drive in Congress to either restrict or reduce annual leave.

APPOINTMENT: Myron H. Taylor, the President's former special envoy to the Vatican, has been given an office in the Executive Office Building. He will work on his files and papers. There's a report Taylor will be appointed an administrative assistant to the President.

NOTES: At General Services Administrator Jess Larson has set up a board of review to recommend Federal procurement and contract policies. Robert E. Minnich is chairman. Serving with him are Harry M. Kurth and Irving Gumbel. . . . Ten stenographer jobs are open overseas. They are GS-4 and 5. No Civil Service required. The maximum age is 35. 7 Injured, 2 Severely, In Head-On Va. Collision

Woman Driver Is Among Victims; District Accidents Hurt 3 Persons

Seven persons were injured, two seriously, in a head-on collision last night on the Leesburg Pike, near Tysons Corner, Fairfax County police reported.

Police said an auto driven by Richard G. Seabolt, 25, of Co. D., Headquarters Battalion, Fort Belvoir, was in collision with another car traveling toward Falls Church which was driven by Mrs. Reba Smith, 35, of 1111 N. Kenilworth st., Arlington.

According to police, Seabolt attempted to pass a truck traveling in the same direction, pulled out and collided with the other vehicle.

Suffers Broken Ribs

Mrs. Smith, who was alone, was admitted to Arlington Hospital in critical condition with cuts, broken ribs and a possible punctured lung.

In the other car, five passengers were injured in addition to the driver, police said. Seabolt suffered cuts, was treated and transferred to Fort Belvoir Hospital.

Others injured were Lois Clayburn, 16, 908 8th st. nw.; Joseph Good, 24, Falls Church, possible broken neck; Francis Baner, 19, Dun Loring, Va.; Milton Honkinson, Dun Loring, and Morris Amos, 19, Fairfax, Va.

Fairfax County Policeman Julian W. Burke said Seabolt was charged with reckless driving, and released for appearance July 3 in Fairfax County Court.

Critically Injured

Three persons were injured—one critically—in separate District traffic accidents yesterday.

In "very serious" condition at Garfield Hospital was a man identified from papers in his wallet as Edward L. Clements, 26, of 820 Decatur st. nw.

He suffered a fractured skull, crushed left arm, multiple cuts and other injuries about 7 p. m. when his car struck a light pole in front of 5107 Illinois ave. nw.

Police said Clements struck two parked cars in pulling out of a space near his home.

Jacob Tebleff, of 325 Gallatin st. nw., told police Clements paid him $15 for damage to his car.

Then, police said, Clements struck another car parked across the street from Tebleoff's car.

The second car is owned by Meyer Rosenfeld, of 2343 15th st. ne. Two children in the Rosenfeld auto escaped injury. Police said Clements did not stop.

An elderly pedestrian and a passenger in a two-car collision were the victims of traffic accidents yesterday.

Possible Skull Fracture

In serious condition at Providence Hospital is Robert Tyler, 44, of 1115 46th st. se. Hospital authorities said Tyler has a possible skull fracture and bruises.

He was thrown out of a car driven by Burton Tollie Davis, 37, of 31 Marianne dr., Morningside, Md., when it collided with the second auto at 2d st. and Virginia ave. sw. about 2:45 p. m.

Seventy-year-old Roy Eugene Story of 839 Florida ave. ne., suffered head injuries when he was struck by a car at 9th and L sts. ne., about 8:10 a. m.

Police charged the driver, Doward Kiser, 30, of 504 L st. ne., with failure to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian.

Fifteen Seized In Police Raid On Poker Game

A man and woman were charged with gambling operations and 13 other persons were arrested on disorderly conduct counts early yesterday when police raided what they said was a poker game at 715 Kenilworth ave. ne.

The woman, Mrs. Mattie Edith Bell, 31, of the Kenilworth st. address, was released under $2000 bond on charges of setting up a gaming table, permitting gaming, and keeping and selling liquor without a license.

Thomas Gray, 27, of 2817 Gainsville st. se., was charged with setting up a gaming table and permitting gaming. He was released under $1000 bond.

Arlington Legion Council to Meet Today

The American Legion Council of Arlington County Posts will meet today at 8:15 p. m. at the Shirley Homes Recreation Hall, 1350 S. 28th st., Arlington, to elect officers.

The county's seven posts each are expected to send five delegates and alternates to the meeting.

Patient Auto Dealer 'Curbs' Joy-Riding of Theft Suspect

The manager of an Alexandria used-car lot early yesterday employed techniques he learned as a State prohibition inspector to capture a suspect in a car-theft case.

Charged with unauthorized use of a vehicle was Daniel Martin Ford, 21, of 514 N. Patrick st., Alexandria. He was held under $1000 bond for an appearance today in Alexandria Police Court.

Theodore Stanley, manager of the American Motor Co., 1801 King st., Alexandria, said he was driving in the vicinity of West ave. and Braddock rd., Alexandria, when he spotted a 1948-model car he thought belonged to his firm.

Stanley gave chase but lost the car after three-quarters of a mile, he told police.

Picking up Pvt. Donald Evans and George Beach, owner of the car company, Stanley parked his car behind a gas station near the used car lot.

Stanley said he assumed the car was stolen by a joy-rider who would return the auto once the fun was over.

At 4 a.m., Stanley again spotted the car. With the policeman and his boss as passengers, he started after it.

In a 60-mile-per-hour chase, Stanley forced the stolen car to the curb in the 2400 block of King st., Alexandria.

The trick in doing that, he said, was learned long and dry years ago when he was state prohibition inspector in Franklin County, Va.

Portraits of Those Who Made History in D. C. and the World To Go on Exhibit Friday in the National Gallery of Art

Paintings Scheduled To Be Shown Through Nov. 19

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Nearly 150 portraits of those who have left their mark on Washington, the nation and the world will go on exhibit at the National Gallery of Art Friday.

The exhibition, titled "Makers of History in Washington, 1800-1950" includes portraits of the Presidents and First Ladies, statesmen, military leaders and others from the administration of George Washington to Harry S. Truman.

The exhibition, assembled with funds provided by the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission, will remain on display through November 19.

Visitors to the city who have missed the opportunity to see the portraits that are a feature of the White House, due to reconstruction of that building, will have an opportunity to see many of the paintings at the National Gallery show, available by courtesy of the President and Mrs. Truman.

Group Portrait Featured

In a room devoted to portraits of those whose work was primarily concerned with the development of the city of Washington is a group painting of the Washington family by Edward Savage. Spread out on the table before them is the map of the proposed "Federal City" as designed by Major Pierre Charles L'Enfant.

Among other portraits in the room is that of Alexander R. ("Boss") Shepherd, who was a member of the Board of Public Works from 1871 to 1873, and Governor of the District of Columbia in 1873-74. The portrait is much more attractive than the statue of him before the District Building at 14th and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

A surprise in store for the visitor is the portrait of Gen. Robert E. Lee. Depicting him as he appeared while an officer of the United States Army, his appearance is much different from that of later years. Grant, as President, Jefferson Davis, Meade, McClellan and poet Walt Whitman are among others of the Civil War period represented.

Anecdote Recalled

Many will be interested in the rubicund face of Lafayette, and admiring the white of the famous Coolidge dog against Mrs. Coolidge's red dress, will be reminded of President Coolidge's suggestion to the artist that he paint her in a white dress. When the artist said he wanted to paint her in a red dress as a contrast to the dog the President suggested that he reverse the plan and make the dog red.

Gorgeous, too, are the whites in the portrait of Mrs. Major Van Buren, while the painting of Andrew Jackson with a horse and cannon in the background and Pershing with a horse suggest little real change in military portraits in a century.

The Most Rev. John Carroll, first Catholic archbishop in the United States and founder of Georgetown University, and Benjamin Latrobe are among other early figures whose portraits are shown, while mid-way in the city's history appears a portrait in blacks of the Lincoln family. Latrobe designed Statuary Hall and the former Supreme Court room of the Capitol.

Among the Moderns

Among the moderns are portraits of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Roosevelt in which the artist, Douglas Chandor, has included "studies"—of the President's hands and a sketch of the Yalta Conference, and of Mrs. Roosevelt's face and hands. President Truman is represented by a handsome portrait painted in 1946 by Frank O. Salisbury.

A portrait of the late Secretary of Defense James Forrestal is remarkable for its taut, strained look. It was painted by Albert K. Murray in 1949.

The exhibition for which a fully illustrated catalogue is being prepared "gives, in microcosm, a preview of what a National Portrait Gallery should be," said David E. Finley, gallery director.

Paul Froehlich, Agriculture Expert, to Retire

Paul Froehlich, statistical expert for the Department of Agriculture and a recipient of the department's superior service award, will retire Friday after 37 years of service.

During the past 17 years, he has been responsible for compiling the annual volume, "Agricultural Statistics," which is standard equipment for economists and writers dealing with such data.

It was for his work in preparing the 1949 edition of the book that Froelich received a superior service award silver medal and certificate from Secretary of Agriculture Charles F. Brannan.

A native of Harrisburg, Pa., Froehlich, 68, received his bachelor's and master's degrees from Gettysburg College. He joined the Agriculture Department in 1913 as a statistical clerk in the Forest Service, transferring after two years to what is now the Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

He has been in statistical and marketing work with the bureau for the past 35 years, principally in fruit and vegetable statistics. He is the author of several publications on statistics and marketing.

Before joining the department, he was in church and YMCA work. At the Gettysburg College commencement last year, Froehlich received a bronze plaque in recognition of meritorious service as secretary of his class for 35 years and as editor of the annual class bulletin.

Air From Canada Slowly Cools City; 88 High Forecast

Death of D. C. Youth On Saturday Believed Due to Prostration; Chemical Test Set

Cool Canadian air filtered—but slowly—into the District yesterday. It held the top temperature down to a simmering 90 and promised a high of 88 for today.

Meantime, Saturday's 96-degree heat—worst of the year—was viewed as the apparent cause of the death of Rance Wadsworth, 19, of 1157 Stevens rd. se.

Wadsworth was pronounced dead on arrival at 3:30 p. m. Saturday at Garfield Hospital.

Dr. Christopher J. Murphy, deputy District coroner, said yesterday that an autopsy indicated that heat prostration had apparently induced death.

Dr. Murphy said, however, that he would withhold a certificate pending chemical analyses.

Wadsworth had been visiting a friend, Raymond Langley, 20, of 521 Quincy st. nw. Dr. Murphy said Langley found Wadsworth unconscious on a bed about 3:15 p. m.

Showers, expected for the District both Saturday night and again yesterday afternoon, failed to materialize. Weather Bureau radar scopes showed rain to the south and southwest of the District yesterday afternoon, but only a few drops sprinkled Washington National Airport.

Today, forecasters said will be clear. The overnight low, thanks to the Canada air, should be near 68—a comedown from the low of 76 recorded at 6:40 a. m. yesterday.

Humidity was a bit lower yesterday, too. The range was from 80 percent at 8 a. m., a low figure for early morning in Washington, to an uncomfortable 51 percent at 1 p. m., when the temperature reached its 90-degree peak.

The weekend's superheated weather had its origin in the Southwestern United States. It moved towards the East via the Middle West, where the air mass was heated even further in the Great Lakes region.

How was Washington taking its first heat wave of 1950?

Pretty calmly and sensibly, generally speaking.

Nearby beaches were filled, so were District swimming pools. But Washingtonians apparently preferred to skip places like the Zoo, which reported a drop in its Sunday attendance.

22 Confirmed By Archbishop At Glen Dale

Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle confirmed 22 patients at Glen Dale Sanitarium, near Bowie, Md., yesterday afternoon. The sacrament was administered to 17 persons in the sanitarium chapel. The Archbishop went to the rooms of the other five who were bedridden.

Groups of patients stood outside the sick rooms reciting prayers during the ceremony. The Archbishop was dressed in gold pontifical robes for the occasion.

The Rev. Walter Schmitz of the Theological College of Catholic University, and the Rev. Stephen J. Hogan S. S. J., pastor of Holy Family Church, Woodmore, Md., assisted the Archbishop. Earlier, Archbishop O'Boyle confirmed 145 adults and children at Holy Family Church.

It's Simple
You, Too, Can Measure The Humidity

It's not only the humidity but how to measure it that's uncomfortable.

The U. S. Weather Bureau tells how in a junior-billboard-size instruction sheet entitled "It Isn't the Heat, It's the Humidity."

It reads better under water, under cool, clear water.

All one needs to get a "measure of the moisture in the air" is a sling psychrometer. And anyone with two thermometers, a strip of wet muslin, a flat stick and a handle with attached cord can make one, it says in regular-size print.

Like a Shillelagh

The thermometers are lashed to the flat stick which is attached to the free end of the handle cord. One thermometer bulb is wrapped with the wet cloth and the whole device is twirled about from the handle, like a shillelagh on overtime duty.

Just what this exertion does to the twirler's own humidity isn't mentioned.

Anyhow, the twirling causes the water to evaporate from the wet muslin; the evaporation cools that one thermometer bulb, and the twirler who can still read gets a different reading from the two thermometers.

More Humidity—Less Evaporation

The more the humidity in the atmosphere, the less evaporation. The less evaporation, the smaller the difference between the wet-cloth-covered thermometer and the dry one.

"The difference in readings between the themometers gives a measure of the moisture in the air," says the Weather Bureau missive, "and can be used to compute the relative humidity."

But that's not all. The psychrometer-twirler just can't stop with humidity readings.

Humidity, like time, space and Einstein is only relative. So it behooves the measurement take to graph out his results. This is done by lining up the thermometers in superimposed position over a diagram of "effective temperature." Where the line between the two temperature readings crosses the "effective temperature" scale is where the humidity seeker finds out how uncomfortable he should feel.

The operation should appeal especially to those who look at a clock to see if they're hungry, or those Washingtonians who dial ST. 2525 to find out if they're tired.

Death of Pepco's Chief Engineer Ruled Suicide

A certificate of suicide was issued yesterday in the death of Howard H. Harrigan, 51, of 343 Baltimore ave., Takoma Park, Md., who was found shot to death in his office at Pepco's Buzzard Point power plant.

Dr. Christopher J. Murphy, deputy coroner, issued the certificate.

Harrigan, chief engineer at the power plant, was found dead in his office 30 minutes after he told his daughter, Nancy, 19, in a telephone conversation that he "wasn't coming home any more."

Homicide detectives said a .25 caliber automatic was found in his right hand. Harrigan left four notes which police said indicated he was despondent.

Two Are Charged With Murder In Fatal Stabbing of Man Here

Two men have signed confessions in the early morning stabbing of 54-year-old John Anderson, Homicide Lieut. Richard Felber announced last night. Both men were charged with murder, he said.

Felber identified the suspects as Preston Bowles, 26, of 1719 Willard st. nw., and Wilmore Braxton, 42, of 2920 Ontario st. nw.

Just a half-hour before Anderson was stabbed, he wounded a fourth man in the case during an argument in the Workmen's Lunch, 1704 U st. nw., police said.

The fourth man, identified by police as Jesse Smith, 30, of 1717 Willard st. nw., was in good condition at Freedmen's Hospital last night with a stab wound in the left chest.

Anderson, fatally wounded in an alley in the 1700 block of New Hampshire ave. nw., staggered into his apartment at 1931 17th st. nw. He was pronounced dead there at 12:37 a. m. by a Gallinger Hospital physician.

Felber said Bowles and Braxton were friends of Smith. Quoting from their signed statements, he said the two were in a booth in the restaurant and overheard the argument between Anderson and Smith.

Police said last night they were still unable to determine the basis of the quarrel.

Felber said that Bowles put Smith in a cab while Braxton followed Anderson.

Braxton beat and knocked down Anderson, Felber said. Bowles then wounded Anderson with a small pocketknife, the homicide officer said.

Both Bowles and Braxton will appear at a coroner's hearing at 12:30 p. m. today.

D. C. Printers Accept $1.50 Wage Hike Bid

AFL printers on the four Washington daily newspapers yesterday accepted by a close vote a new work contract providing for weekly wage increase of $1.50 for all shifts.

The vote was 178 to 152 as the membership of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 ratified the agreement reached with the publishers last Tuesday. The union meeting at Turner's Arena lasted almost three hours.

Provisions of the agreement are retroactive to May 1.

Vacation Schedules Liberalized

The agreement also liberalizes vacation scheduling, to permit more typographical employes to participate in the choice vacation dates.

However, the most significant provision of the new contract—from the long-range point of view—is the pioneer approach of the publishers and the printers to the problems of technological change.

The contract sets up a Joint Experimental Committee, comprising two management and two union representatives, to deal with problems arising from the introduction of teletypesetting equipment.

At the same time, management gives the union jurisdiction over the teletypesetting machines.

Linotype Operators Displaced

James J. O'Connor, union president, pointed out that the teletypesetting machines have already displaced linotype operators in several cities of Florida and the Carolinas and represent a threat to the jobs of the International Typographical Union membership. By winning jurisdiction over these machines now, O'Connor said, the union is assured that the new equipment will be operated by ITU members.

Typesetting in the Washington newspaper shops is by manually-operated linotype machines. The teletypesetting equipment does away with the manual operator at the typesetting machinery.

Teletypesetting equipment is made up of two units, a tape perforating machine, operated by a keyboard similar to that of a typewriter, and an operating unit attached to the standard typesetting machinery, such as a linotype machine. As the tape is fed into the operating unit, the linotype machine sets and justifies the type just as if a manual operator were running it.

May Operate Machines

By obtaining jurisdiction over the teletypesetting machine, the union wins the right to operate the tape-perforating machines and to maintain the typesetting machines.

Big question involving the teletypesetting machines is whether or not they are economically sound. The publishers here are considering testing one or more of these machines. The joint committee is to collect data on the machines, and work out procedures and conditions for training the operators, manning the machines, setting wage scales, and like problems.

Management and union officials here believe it is the first time that such a joint experimental committee has been established in this country.

Started Last Fall

The contract is the result of collective bargaining going back to September, 1949. The negotiators held 35 meetings before reaching the tentative agreement last Tuesday morning.

The local had originally asked for a pay increase of $9 a week for the day shift, $14 for the night shift and $9 and a 30-hour week for the their third shift. Other first demands were a pension plan and sick-leave provisions, as well as more liberal vacations. Management had started the negotiations by suggesting a $4 cut in wages and changes in the apprentice system, shift differentials and reproduction requirements.

Under the new contract, about 650 local ITU members will get $92.50 to $102.50, depending on the shift, for a 35-hour basic work week.

Since 1947, the publishers and the union have been operating under an "agreement and scale of prices," but without a formal contract. The new agreement is a formal contract, which in fulfilling the requirements of the Taft-Hartley management-labor relations act, has no provisions for a closed shop, which the union got under previous formal contracts. The contract runs until April 30, 1951.

Area 'Hams' Buzz Others In Hemisphere

Washington area radio "hams" contacted thousands of other amateur operators in various parts of the hemisphere during the past weekend in a 24-hour drill under emergency conditions.

Using equipment taken from their home stations and powered by portable gasoline generators or batteries, the "hams" battled poor atmospheric conditions in participating in the nationwide disaster communication session.

The drill, sponsored by the American Radio Relay League, was also a contest for amateur radio clubs and individual "hams," competing to make the largest number of contacts in the 24-hour period ending at 5 p. m. yesterday.

Announcement of the winners was delayed until fall because each log will have to be checked by the Relay League against those of all stations contacted.

A windstorm interrupted operations of the Potomac Valley Radio Club about midnight Saturday, when its 260-foot vertical emergency antenna, held up by balloons, was swept into trees at Fort Meade, Md.

About 40 members of the club operated nine transmitters in shifts during the weekend, and contacted about 1000 amateurs in Europe and various parts of this continent.

Some 48 members of the Capitol Suburban Radio Club, operating five stations on the grounds of the Takoma Park American Legion house at White Oak, Md., sent "emergency" test messages to some 300 "hams" in such points as Ontario, Mexico, the West Coast. Their balloon-held antenna also was a casualty during the drill.

Tobé Says...

What About Wearing Velvet in Summer?

Several of you have written to ask me whether I honestly think it's good taste to wear velvet in the summer. Yes, I think it is—as far as accessories are concerned at any rate.

Women have always worn velvet hats in the summer—and the tiny little ones that are now in fashion are no hotter than any other kind of hat. Other velvet accessories such as bags and belts are very well suited to our present day summer fashions I think.

Nice Day for Sitting On Somebody's Lawn

By Elizabeth Maguire

SOCIETY took to the country yesterday in search of a breeze. Some swam, some fished, and some just sat and enjoyed leisurely conversation. A chance to while away a mid-June afternoon was offered at a garden party given yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Akers at Little Honey Creek Lodge, their home near Thurmont, Md.

Over 300 guests were greeted by Mr. and Mrs. Akers from 2 o'clock on. Some strolled on the lawn, some dipped in the pool, and others doffed their socks and waded along a stream. At 5 a buffet was served, of cool salads, cold meats and varied ices.

In the gathering were Dr. and Mrs. John Oliver LaGorce of Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Gimbel of Rye, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Walter of Eastern Shore, Md., and Alfred Barton of Miami Beach, Fla. All were house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Akers over the weekend.

Miss Betsy Beach, whose marriage to David Sterling takes place today, remained in town to attend two parties given in her honor. A bridesmaid, Miss Julia Bowdoin, gave a luncheon for her, and a dinner for Miss Beach was given by former Minister to Sweden and Mrs. Frederick A. Sterling, parents of the bridegroom.

Both parties were attended by members of the wedding party only. Miss Bowdoin entertained at her home, and Mr. and Mrs. Sterling seated guests at small tables in the garden of their Georgetown house.

The wedding today will take place at 4:30 o'clock at St. Matthew's Cathedral, to be followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Ferguson Beach.

'Gigi' Is French, Frothy and Wise

By Richard L. Coe

"GIGI" (call her gee-gee), at the Plaza, is one of those saucy French pieces we haven't had in too long. It's deliciously wise. Here are some of its quips:

"A telephone is good only for business men and for women who have something to hide."

"A young girl accompanied by you is no longer a young girl."

"The first thing a young girl must learn is how to handle lobsters, eggs and asparagus."

"Instead of marrying too soon," an old courtesan explains, "we marry at last."

These occur in a frisky scrips that will delight the wise but will sail mercifully over the heads of the young. The story comes from a novel by Colette, who is painting a tender picture of Paris at the turn of the century, a very romantic Paris as enjoyed by the rich, lucky few and their accommodating friends.

The 16-year-old heroine, an utterly charming, innocent creature, sums up the situation when she points out that her grandmother never married nor did her mother. She is being trained in the ways of upper bracket courtesans by her very demanding and proper grandmother and greataunt. Both have put aside comfortable livings from their, er, working days and their careful regard for their innocent young descendent forms some of the most topsy-turvey humor you've ever seen filmed.

Now while this is certainly not for highly exacting moral persons and is decidedly not for children, it is handled with not only extreme delicatesse but also with a dignity for human beings which only a very wise and experienced person can have.

For Colette is simply pointing out, in "Gigi," that there are codes and rules to everything and that the most exacting people may well lie in that class of society not usually mentioned sympathetically. And while Tante Alicia may have been the mistress of the Khedive of Egypt and a few of Europe's lesser crowned heads, she came by her comfortable old age by following as strict a pattern of rules as ever made Mrs. Astor queen of her 400.

"GIGI," a Splater International Pictures release, produced by Claude Dolbert, directed by Jacqueline Audry, screenplay by Pierre Laroche from a novel by Colette. At the Plaza.

THE CAST

Gigi	Danielle Delorme
Gaston	Frank Villard
Mamita	Yvonne de Bray
Alicia	Gaby Morlay
Liane d'Exelmans	Madeleine Rousset
Honore	Jean Tissier
Emmanuel	Paul Demange
The Instructor	Pierre Juvenet

Fooey on a Topaze

We watch Gigi, then, emerge from the cocoon of her youth under careful auspices. Tante Alicia drums into her the gradation of precious stones. You should see that one sneer at the mention of a topaze. And she points out that only the vulgar and those unsure of themselves give such obvious gifts as jewelry. And we watch Gigi fall in love for the first time—with a man who's long been a friend of the family and whom she can't stop calling "Uncle."

What makes Colette's yarn more perversely amusing is that after a long line of unmarried forebears, Gigi can't seem to follow the tradition. "Uncle" finally marries her.

Much of the fun and all of the style in "Gigi" comes not from what is said or done, but from what isn't. It is a film of virtually perfect taste; there are no pictures to offend the sensibilities and what is said is at once so saucy, so wise and so honestly human that you'll be delighted.

And you may, if you're a bit long in the tooth, remember that very similar film Ginger Rogers once made from Victoria Lincoln's "The Primrose Path." The movies called it something else, but a long search in the files still hasn't yielded the title.

Takes Its Time

Don't be bothered by a leisurely start. There's nothing rushed about this one and if you let yourself slide into the first 20 minutes you'll be rewarded. The technicalities—and cuts—are not so good, but lay that to the fact that this picture was one of the few made in France during the occupation which the Germans okayed, a blessing finally given because it has nothing whatever to do with anything that seemed to concern them.

As a matter of fact, of course, its wisdom is pure Gallic sauce and seeing it under the Nazi rule must have been like watching the return of the tricolor.

The performances are immensely suave and besides Danielle Delorme as the charming innocent, you'll relish Gaby Morlay as that gem instructress who made Gigi conscious of precious metals. Seeing gold on her beloved's cane, the little one marvels: "A man must be rich if he can buy things for his cane."

Mars Is Flesh Pink, But Atom Warfare Brought a Stone Age

ODDLY ENOUGH, the Metropolitan's new arrival, which sets out for the moon and winds up on Mars, has a serious tone which makes it more than you might expect.

The picture called "Rocketship X-M" and concerns the first jet-propelled attempt to get from earth to another planet. There is a cool, matter-of-fact approach to the scenes and while, naturally, they're wildly imaginative, there's a neat twist to the end that the deep thinkers have been trying to get across in bigger words.

What you wonder when this five-some sets out for the moon is how they're going to get back if they do reach the moon. Queer, scientific, well, neo-scientific, things happen on the way and our friends land on Mars.

And what do they find? They discover that sometime back atom warfare had reduced the planet to a rubble and the few remaining creatures are plumb in another stone age.

Now, isn't this what Walter Lippman and Joe Alsop have been talking about?

Of course there have to be the weird things you'd expect—there's True Love in our rocket and there are some remarks that may make you snicker. Before the takeoff someone asks: "Have you told commercial vehicles to detour 100 miles south?" And on Mars, which is a tasty flesh pink, the good Dr. Eckstrom sighs over "immense deposits of pitchblend." Part of the ship does look like the Statler lobbby and there's the old bromide about women: beautiful Osa Massen plays a chemist, Dr. Lisa Van Horn, who hates men, it seems, until Lloyd Bridges catches her in the double moonlight.

But—what do you expect from a movie about a trip to the moon? It's something of an achievement, it seems to me, when you get a Buck Rogers adventure without too much earthshaking back on dear old Earth and when you get a crack about the futility of general atomic warfare you've got a bit of the unexpected.

Kurt Neuman wrote, produced and directed the picture, one more reminder that for a picture to have a quality, it requires the services of the writer all the way down the line.

Oldsters who remember "The Lost World" will go for this one and so will the kids. R. L. C.

Koyke Superb as 'Butterfly' In Final Opera Performance

By Paul Hume

Ten nights on an opera barge wound up last night with "Madame Butterfly" at the Watergate.

The San Carlo Company brought in its most popular artist, Hizi Koyke, for this repetition of the Puccini melodrama. Mario Palermo was also a new Pinkerton this year, and John Lawler replaced William Wilderman as the Bonze.

The performance moved with refreshing life, especially in the taxing second act. Koyke has a limitless fund of artful touches and natural graces, making her embodiment of the title role something to draw people by the thousands.

Her manner toward each of the characters is perfect; her conduct with Pinkerton tops them all in its simple, yet beguiling, sweetness. Her voice served her better than yast year and often brought her vigorous approval from what looked to be the largest audience of the season.

Palermo was a seviceable Pinkerton; Lawler an excellent Bonze. With Richard Torigi at his best in Sharpless' thankless part, the opera was handsomely cast.

With the company's departure we remember with gratitude the fine singing of Dianna De Sanctos in her many roles. And in George Tallone, Fortune Gallo has found another fine artist who will serve him well in a wide variety of parts.

The chorus made its second act finale a bit better last night, but it needs some young voices before it will sound the way it should.

Above all, for it is he who had made the season "go" as it should, we appreciate the conducting of Nicholas Rescigno. His work is becoming more recognized this year, as he heads for the San Francisco opera season.

The San Carlo management announced 42,000 tickets were sold in 10 nights here. It is estimated another thousand saw the operas free from the bridges and roadway.

HELLO, SON, WHAT HAVE YOU BEEN DOING TODAY?
I WAS PLAYING AT TOMMY'S, AND WE WATCHED THE MAN PUT IN THEIR TELEPHONE. WHAT'S A PARTY LINE, DADDY?
THAT'S A TELEPHONE LINE THAT MORE THAN ONE FAMILY CAN USE, SON
WHY DO THEY HAVE THEM?
WELL, FOR ONE THING, THEY MEAN A NUMBER OF FAMILIES CAN GET TELEPHONE SERVICE, INSTEAD OF JUST ONE. IF IT WEREN'T FOR PARTY LINES, TOMMY'S FOLKS PROBABLY WOULDN'T HAVE A TELEPHONE YET
DO WE HAVE A PARTY LINE?
WE SHARE A PARTY LINE, SON, AND THAT SHARING PART IS IMPORTANT. IT HELPS US AS WELL AS OTHERS ON THE LINE TO BETTER TELEPHONE SERVICE

Caddington To Head VFW In Maryland

Cumberland, Md., June 25 (AP). Ward W. Caddington, 9404 Flower ave., Silver Spring, Md., attorney, was elected Maryland Department Commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars today.

Caddington

Election of officers closed the annual encampment.

Caddington, a veteran of World War II, succeeds Francis J. Valle of Baltimore.

A Baltimore attorney, Albert W. Styles, was elected senior vice commander, and Francis H. Webb of the Henry Hart Post, Cumberland, was chosen junior vice commander.

Webb was elected unanimously and also without opposition, the first time that this happened in the junior vice commandership in 25 years.

R. C. Gamber of Baltimore was re-elected to his paid, full-time post as quartermaster, while Dr. Louis Kolodner was re-elected surgeon. The Rev. Thomas A. Whalen of Baltimore won re-election as chaplain.

Armenian Independence Group Formed

Formation of an American Committee for Armenian Independence was announced last night at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Public disclosure of the existence of the new committee was made by Setrak Benjamin Minas, a committee member, at the opening banquet of the seventeenth annual convention of the Armenian Youth Federation.

John Hovanessian, national chairman of the Armenian Revolutionary Federation which formed the committee in Boston last week, said the step was aimed at acquainting the American public with the Armenian struggle for freedom.

"We are making a public expression that we are alongside the people of the other nations" which have been engulfed by Russia, Hovanessian said.

The American branch of the Armenian Revolutionary Federation represents 175,000 Armenian-Americans. Aram Proudian of New York, who lost his parents, three brothers and three sisters during the wholesale slaughter of Armenians by Turks in the First World War, is chairman of the new committee.

In his opening talk, Minas called for an Armenian language program on the Voice of America "as a voice of hope."

Other speakers who joined in hopes for early liberation of Armenia were Senators Homer Ferguson (R., Mich.), Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah), and Edward Martin (R., Pa.), Representatives George A. Dondero (R., Mich.), and George M. Grant (D., Ala.) and Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the National Relations Board.

Sex Response Held Key To Fertility

San Francisco, June 25 (AP).—The failure of some women to respond fully to sex contact probably has an important bearing on female sterility, says Dr. Alfred Kinsey, author of the famed report on male sex behavior.

The records of 600 women who want babies but cannot become pregnant yield striking evidence of their unconscious lack of acceptance of sex in one way or another, Dr. Kinsey told the American Society for the Sstudy of Sterility last night.

In about 35 percent of the sex contacts of these childless women there never is a climactic moment, Dr. Kinsey said.

By contrast, women in the relatively fertile low income group of Americans experience this climax 65 to 95 percent of the time.

Ten percent of all American women go through life without experiencing this sensation, the scientist added. The climax figures in only about 65 percent of the cases involving women of the college class. It occurs very infrequently in 30 percent, more often in another 30 percent, and nearly always in the other 30 percent. This last 30 percent represents a response about normal to males. A few women have responses which repeat themselves in rapid succession.

"The typical picture of the sterile woman is one who never has accepted sex," Dr. Kinsey said. "We do not know yet whether this lack of abandon may be traced to sterility or whether sterility may be a factor in that phase of inhibition."

ACREAGE, SALE 75

MARYLAND

Montgomery County Acreage
The United States Census just reported that Montgomery County in the last 10 years has increased in population 95%. That means that acreage in the county at the same time should have increased in value, 95%. In the best residential zone it has increased much more than that in value. We have nearly 3 miles of frontage on Bradley and River Road overlooking the Congressional Country Club. River Road as you know will soon become Main Ave. extended. I am building my own home and I am in my 84th year, and the only one in Washington at that age who is building his own home. This home fronts the club and has the most beautiful setting of any home in any part of the United States. This setting of the home is more beautiful than the setting of the White House where Mr. Truman lives. It's also more beautiful than George Washington's mount Vernon home. When the beautiful white columns of the house are up on the front porch, the rest of the whole house will be painted white. Some day there will be dozens of automobiles parked on River Road looking at this house Mr. James E. Elgin, one of the best builders in Montgomery County, has charge of the work. I don't have to give it any of my attention, all I have to do is sign the checks. I am more equally as beautiful hills adjoining this site of mine. We'll sell you the balance of the ground as an entirety only at 15c a sq. ft. That will give you control. You can have your own private bridle path that is a great attraction to horse lovers. You can have your own private golf course right up to your door. Ride out and look over these beautiful hills and if you can do better elsewhere, don't buy them. This is a great traffic center also, and where traffic centers come, shopping centers come, too. I built Chevy Chase, D. C. we tried to keep shopping centers away but they came. I bought my first ground in Chevy Chase for $3000 an acre. This same ground now in the shopping center is worth a million dollars an acre so undoubtedly the same thing will happen in front of the Congressional Club that will make this ground worth over a million dollars an acre. When I sold the Chevy Chase property that is worth a million dollars an acre, I sold it at 33c a sq. ft. People were afraid to buy it—afraid it was too far out. The automobile has revolutionized real estate value. This property is about 12 miles from Dupont Circle, where some of this land is worth a million dollars an acre. Washington is the best real estate town to buy acreage in in the world. FULTON R. GORDON, Owner. When I sell my home, WO. 0933, for further details. Brokers attention.

Radio-TV Magazine Urges Fusion

Union of all radio and television forces into a single national congress with a single spokesman is proposed by Broadcasting-Telecasting magazine in an editorial to appear in today's weekly issue.

At present, the magazine says, various parts of the industries are represented by a number of separate and partially competitive associations, such as the National Association of Broadcasters, the Radio-Television Manufacturers Association and the Television Broadcasters Association.

The single spokesman, according to the editorial, would be charged with handling policy, legislative and regulatory relations and public relations.

The main issue before all members of the industry, the editorial says, is Government versus private operation.

All-Day Radio Show to Mark V-D Day July 1

Plans for VD Day, a day-long radio program on venereal disease to be presented over WASH next Saturday, were announced yesterday.

The program, for the most part, transcriptions of radio material broadcast since 1948, is scheduled to run from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.

District Health Department officials said it will be the first time any such an extended program has been sent out over the air.

VD Day features will include the Columbia University and Oklahoma City dramatic productions of 1948; Columbia University's 1949 series; two documentary scripts, "The Undiscovered" and "Lonesome Road," which were produced in this city, and the three "popular" VD songs.

Also on the show will be remarks from Dr. S. Ross Taggart, director of the District Health Department's bureau of venereal diseases, and Gunnar Back, chairman of the Citizens Committee against VD.

Couple Arriving From Europe Find United States Amazing

glass partitions tightly closed, always seem to brood about the size of the tip you are going to give them. Not our Jimmy.

"You folks from Paris?" he said. "I was there once myself. On a pleasure trip, in August, '44. How's Jackline?"

"How's who?."

"Jackline: J-a-c-q-u-e-l-i-n-e. Cute girl. Lives near Pig-alley on Montmartre. I used to write her for a while."

We had to confess that we had never met Jackline, but Jimmy went on telling us about her, his postwar jobs, the Brooklyn girl he eventually married. By the time he stopped at our hotel, we had become such good friends that my wife considered inviting him for a drink.

Her next surprise came at the hotel registration desk. As I signed in, she pulled out her passport and handed it to the room clerk.

"Can I have it back tomorrow morning?" she asked.

The reception clerk was at a loss. What on earth did she want him to do with her passport?

"Well, have it submitted to the police, of course," my companion said.

Everyone laughed, but how could I blame my wife for her "boner"?

In all continental countries we had to fill out long police questionnaires each time we arrived at a hotel. In Spain, we weren't allowed to buy a railway ticket without completing forms in triplicate about our personal status and the purpose of our journey.

At one place—I think it was in Budapest—they even wanted to know the maiden names of our grandmothers before giving us a room!

After a week or so in New York, we went to buy a used car. When we had sold our buggy in Paris before leaving, the transaction had to be approved by eight different government offices. Over here, it was a bit easier.

"I'll just fix up that license plate," the dealer said, "and you can drive the bus away."

I gave him my bank references and suggested making a down payment.

"Who wants a down payment?" he said. "I've got your address, haven't I?"

It then suddenly struck me that ever since the Founding Fathers had pledged to each other "their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor," the American way of life has been largely based on a very simple rule: trust your fellow-men.

The kind official on the boat, the all-confiding cab driver, the hotel manager, the car dealer, yes, our whole society couldn't function without the faith that most Americans have in each other.

That is perhaps the most fundamental difference I noticed when I came back from a long stay in Europe. Over there, nearly everyone treats his neighbor with distrust if not suspicion. Here, people figure on the next man being a "regular guy" until proven otherwise. Last week, I saw an ad in the papers that offered a new book on these terms:

"Accept this volume for five days of free examination. At the end of five days, you can either remit $.. in full payment or send the book back to us and owe us nothing."

That sort of an ad couldn't appear in any of the Old Countries these days. It's an ad to be proud of. Our traditions of mutual trust have made America great. We better keep them alive!

What About the Actor?

Benefits Are Great, Of Course, But . . .

By John Crosby

"VARIETY" calls attention this week to a situation which is both ticklish and serious, this business of benefits. It has always seemed to me that entertainers give more than their fair share in cash, time, and talent to charities. No one has ever come to me and proposed that I write an article for the magazine and donate the purchase price to the Heart Fund. I'm sure no one has even approached Procter & Gamble and asked them to set aside a week's production of soap to be sold for a cancer fund.

Miss Niesen

Yet the actors are repeatedly and everlastingly asked to donate their time and their talent, which is to them what writing is to me (hard work) and soap is to Procter & Gamble. The benefit thing is particularly dangerous, as far as entertainers are concerned, in television. Recently, a host of entertainers—Milton Berle, Martin & Lewis, Gertrude Niesen, Mindy Carson, Robert Alda and Betty Bruce—staged a two hour and 15 minute show to drum up contributions for the Cerebral Palsy Association. It was a good TV show. I guess everyone had a good time and the Cerebral Palsy Association got some money for its valuable work.

Blooms Fade

BUT the following night, Mindy Carson appeared on the Ed Sullivan show and, as "Variety" points out, some of the bloom had worn off. With the exception of a few actors like Bob Hope of whom the public apparently never tires, actors have to husband their personalities as a miser his gold. You can get tired of even the best of them if you see them too often.

As far as television is concerned, this is particularly hard on the entertainers because a little thing called exclusivity has crept in. An actor gets more money if he can guarantee that he has not been seen on television for some time. As almost everyone now knows, the home audience tires of people on television much faster than it tires of people on radio. Therefore, if an actor appears on a television benefit, he is reducing his earning ability and shortening his television life expectancy which is short enough as it is. This, I think, is much too much to ask of an actor no matter how worthy the cause.

Some time ago, Jack Benny was driving me to some appointment I had in Hollywood. He was on his way to do a benefit. I suggested at the time that actors were carrying more than their share of the load in matters of charity. I don't recall what he said but the implication was that an actor couldn't do very much about it.

In the Public Domain

ENTERTAINERS are much more in the public domain than, say, a bank teller. Their careers depend on popular favor more than yours and mine. Like you and me they are opposed to cerebral palsy and cancer, but they have to be more vehement about it and also, unlike you and me, they have to put themselves on record. In other words they have to play benefits, willy nilly.

There are some entertainers who not only don't mind it but thrive on it. Bob Hope is perhaps the most conspicuous example.

But not every actor is Bob Hope. Hope could play benefits till the day of judgment without impairing his health or his career. A dog act or a singer or a less versatile comedian can't. I'm not suggesting that TV benefits be banned. But I do think that charity organizations should think twice before asking an entertainer to do a routine—of which he has perhaps only three or four in his entire repertoire—before an audience of millions and thus kill his act for a matter of months on other TV shows.

The actors can't speak for themselves. Someone has to speak up for them. Me, for instance.

Speaker at tonight's meeting of the District Line Club (8 p. m., Petworth Library, Georgia ave. and Upshur st. nw., everybody welcome) will be I. J. Parker of 45-J Ridge rd., Greenbelt, Md., who drew this cartoon. He'll do a "chalk talk" on cartooning.

FEMININE VIEWPOINT

Apropos of our recent discussion of the fellow who says he lives on $300 a year, W. M. O'C. advises:

"I gave up trying to keep a budget when I found out that my wife considers cigars a luxury."

MAIL BAG

Dear Mr. Gold:

I am writing in behalf of my friend Eddie Gallaher.

It is suspicion that causes wars. You should trust your friends. If Eddie and Mark say they played, they played.

Are you so hard up you can't spare 20 cents? I'll send you some money.

There's nothing worse than a welsher. You made a bet and now you are trying to change it by adding two more players.

Aren't you ashamed of yourself? I'll be looking for a retraction in your column.

Mary Lawton.

Dear Mary:

I'll try to answer your questions in order. But first let me point out that "Mr. Gold" is my father's name. My name is Bill.

You are right about suspicion being a cause of war. But this is a friendly war, designed solely to amuse newspaper readers and radio listeners. Eddie and Mark have been my friends for years.

I am not too hard up to pay the original bet. As a matter of fact, I'm going to buy Old Pro Gallaher a soda just before the playoff match starts. While he's congratulating me on being a good loser, maybe I can slip a sleeping pill into the bubble water. Unlike race horses, golfers get no saliva test.

Seriously, my afterthought about a foursome of radio mugs is based on the theory that lots of listeners would like to see their favorites in person some Sunday afternoon—and what better way to do it than out in the fresh air. (With the rain coming down by the bucketful, no doubt). Bill.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Playful black mother cat and her 8-week-old daughter." (Ludlow 4-2382.)

"Young mother cat and two 5-week-old kittens." (Michigan 5196.)

TOO LATE

One of the mothers in our neighborhood was talking about her boy the other day.

"All year long," she said, "we could hardly pry him away from the television set long enough for him to do his homework. But the other day he amazed me. He turned off the set voluntarily, because his favorite programs were off the air for the summer."

"Aha," I said, "you finally got him to do some homework, eh?"

"Are you kidding?" she sighed. "Now school is out for the summer."

OVERHEARD

"Whadda ya mean, do we need another bridge across the river? Of course we need it. When those Republicans get back in, every road leading out of Washington is going to be choked with refugees."

Dangers Noted in 'Age of Fear'

By Drew Pearson

Rapid City, South Dakota.—I came out to the Black Hills yesterday to dedicate the gigantic lighting system which now floods the majestic, granite faces of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, carved high on the side of Mount Rushmore in this beautiful national park.

PEARSON

Sometimes I think it is a good thing for a Washington newspaperman, or even a Washington bureaucrat or for every American, as a matter of fact, to get away from his routine and do some thinking about our founding fathers and the great goals they set for us to carry out.

The four patriots whose faces are carved on this mountain side were all crusaders and, in a sense, dangerous revolutionaries. In fact, Washington and Jefferson were considered so dangerous that the crowned heads of Europe tried desperately—even as late as the Emperor Maximilian during our civil war—to defeat the "subversive" democracy left in their wake.

Lincoln was another revolutionary, considered so dangerous by the South that it rebelled. While Teddy Roosevelt's "dangerous" campaign against big business caused the corporations of his day to heap more abuse on his head than that heaped on the head of another Roosevelt.

Nevertheless, these men set a creed of government and a goal for human living which has surpassed anything in the world today. They tried to take the basic principles of Christianity and apply them to the governing of peoples. Christ left to the world the doctrine of the dignity of man. The founding fathers, building in a new, clean world, tried to carry that doctrine out. The philosophy which Jefferson laid down for the guidance and protection of the individual man in the society of men was carried further by Lincoln's crusade to make all men free and equal.

Age of Fear

However, in this year 1950, half way through this modern and amazing century, we are in real danger of bogging down in an "age of fear."

Faced with the awful knowledge that others have the atomic bomb, faced with the fear of the hydrogen bomb, of bacteriological warfare, of new trans-oceanic submarines and transatlantic rockets, we are in definite danger of relapsing into an age of fear, an age when we do not go forward because we are paralyzed with fright.

The symptoms of fear have been all too apparent in recent months—almost ever since President Truman announced that Russia had the atomic bomb. It is a well-known medical fact that fear causes paralysis and lack of decision. When injected into the human body it causes nausea and poison. Injected into the body politic, it has the same effect.

Perhaps that is why we have been so busy looking under State Department beds and worrying about five-year-old mistakes that we fail to look ahead to prevent the mistakes of the future.

Washington and Jefferson had a lot more excuse to succumb to fear than we. They were operating 13 weak and struggling colonies, surrounded by big and avaricious monarchies. But they were so busy pioneering, so busy pushing on to new frontiers, that they didn't have time to be afraid.

Yet we, the most powerful Nation in the world, are so busy concentrating on armed defense that either we don't have time, or are too paralyzed with fear to take the offensive.

Ideas, Not Bullets

The Communists today are not fighting with bodies or bullets, but with ideas and men's minds. Bodies and bullets, artillery and airplanes are expensive. Ideas are cheap; though it takes ingenuity, perseverance and courage to use them.

We have sent billions in arms, food and materiel to Europe and the Orient; but we have not accompanied them with ideas. In most cases we have not even stamped them with a mark to let it be known they came from the American people. Sometimes we have stamped them with the initials "UNNRA" or "JRC," but few people know what those initials mean.

Almost never have we spelled out the fact: "These gifts come to you from folks just like you in Wichita, Wenatchee and Waukegan."

One trouble with us—and our our allies—is that our arms program leaves no alternative but war. Adequate arms are necessary. But piling arms on top of more arms, with no other objective or alternative in sight, makes people lose hope. They know this leads to war.

Whole-hearted enthusiasm for their fine benefit activities goes into the work of Junior League volunteers for the Heart Association. Their deep interest is the "In Bed" Magazine, published monthly and distributed to 350 children in the Washington area between the ages of 7 to 15, who have heart ailments. These young women do everything connected with the preparation and publication of this booklet, which has won wide attention. Previewing their work, Washington's popular Virginia Baker aroused enthusiasm, too, for her beautiful ensembles from The Hecht Co.
